Editorial

By Maggie Thompson

It's been two or three years since I first saw displays of the "Successories" line of products: paperweights, lapel pins, cups, posters, and the like — all carrying "motivational" messages. At first glance, I liked the idea. I'm always on the lookout for something that will make me feel cheery, inspire me to accomplish what I set out to do, and/or provide a reminder that will make me work more productively. So I looked over the stock in the store and was dismayed at first and then disgusted.

What I found was item after item designed to increase (a) stress, (b) hatred for any perceived competitor, (c) a sense of the lack of importance of any personal needs, and (d) a feeling of impending doom over any failure to achieve even the most impossible victories. Plaque after mug after desk photo proclaimed it: If you haven't had at least one major anxiety attack by the end of this fiscal year, you're not good enough for this company.

Think I'm kidding?

• A poster with a photo of a handshake and text reading, "Rule #1: If we don't take care of the customer … somebody else will."

• A baseball paperweight with your choice of mottos: "Sometimes you just have to play hard ball" or "The one who complains about the way the ball bounces is likely the one who dropped it."

• Another poster, this with a picture of a lion with a gazelle in the background and the caption, "The essence of survival: Every morning in Africa, a Gazelle wakes up. It knows it must run faster than the fastest Lion or it will be killed … Every morning a Lion wakes up. It knows it must outrun the slowest Gazelle or it will starve to death. It doesn't matter whether you are a Lion or a Gazelle … when the sun comes up, you'd better be running."

Are these things you'd buy for yourself — to surround yourself with pressure on the job, just in case you're not already working at top urgency levels already? I don't think so. I think these are signs bosses buy for employees — signs that say, "If you let up for one minute, you're dead." Is it any wonder that the workers of America are buying Scott Adams' Dilbert memorabilia in ever-increasing quantities? It's a comic strip that has conveyed the only possible survivor's response to "Successories"-type office furnishings. My 1997 Dilbert strip-a-day calendar, for example, has a box whose original alone I would love to frame and mount above my desk: Dilbert observing Wally (or is it Bruce? or Bud?) and saying, "I admire your ability to get paid for this," as Wally (or B or B) stares at his computer screen, which displays a comic strip. That I can relate to.

There is nothing so easy but that it becomes difficult when you do it reluctantly. Good old Terence (190-159 B.C.), who thus pointed out, centuries in advance, the problem a worker would face when seeing those "Successories" items. It seems to me that a potential market for comics-associated material, then, lies in imitating "Successories" with a twist — realizing that the beautiful poster art could more inspiringly be used to enhance truly supportive messages. Here are some of the sort I mean, swiped from the excellent Time Management for Unmanageable People by Ann McGee Cooper with Duane Trammell:

• "When you have got a thing where you want it, it is a good thing to leave it where it is." (Sir Winston Churchill)

• "Don't put off for tomorrow what you can do today, because if you enjoy it today you can do it again tomorrow." (James A. Michener)

• "Nothing is particularly hard if you divide it into small jobs." (Henry Ford)

• Just get started!

• If you only do things you can do perfectly, you stop learning new skills, stop taking chances, and stop having fun.

I'd be happy to refer to most of these for a pep-up reminder, especially if coupled with a nice piece of art.

(And what was my immediate reward for writing this essay? When I referred to the Cooper-Trammel book, I found stuck in its pages the $7 I'd received in change when I bought it. The payoff for doing a job can be found when and where you least expect it.)

Marvel files Chapter 11 bankruptcy petition

Court approves orders to OK full payment of salaries, wages, benefits, and bills

By Maggie Thompson

Marvel Holdings, Marvel (Parent) Holdings, and Marvel III Holdings announced Dec. 27 that they had filed voluntary petitions for reorganization under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code in the U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the District of Delaware in Wilmington. The three companies own approximately 80.2 million shares of Marvel Entertainment Group Inc. common stock.

Marvel Entertainment Group said the filing was done "in order to implement a proposed $525 million recapitalization that will enable Marvel to pursue its new strategic initiatives and achieve sustained profitability." Later in the day, it announced that the court had approved the company's request to have access to "an initial portion of the $100 million debtor-in-possession (DIP) financing committed by Chase Manhattan Bank."

History

CBG reported on Marvel's recent financial troubles in #1203 and #1204. Nov. 12 Marvel announced third-quarter losses and financial problems that sent its stock and bond prices tumbling. From its closing price of 4⅜ the day before, it fell to 2¾ by the end of trading, and 3,240,000 shares changed hands, still leaving Ron Perelman as the controlling stockholder and a director of Marvel Entertainment Group.

Andrews Group Inc. (an indirect subsidiary of Perelman's MacAndrews & Forbes) proposed to provide money under a number of conditions, including that it would have Toy Biz Inc. become a wholly owned subsidiary of Marvel and that the value of existing Marvel shares would be diluted in the process. Holders of Marvel stocks and bonds had attacked the Perelman plan, contending that it would devalue the stocks, which are collateral for the Marvel bonds.

Andrews gets Toy Biz

Following the bankruptcy filing, Andrews and Toy Biz announced that they had entered into a definitive merger agreement under which Andrews Group will acquire all shares of Class A common stock held by the Toy Biz public stockholders at a price of $22.50 per share.

The transaction has been unanimously approved by the boards of directors of both companies. The Toy Biz board of directors, on the recommendation of a special committee of directors not affiliated with Andrews Group, determined that the merger is fair and in the best interests of the public holders of the Class A common stock.

Nov. 20, 1996, Andrews Group entered into stock purchase agreements with Isaac Perlmutter and Avi Arad, the holders of approximately 67% of the Toy Biz Class A common stock, to acquire their shares for a combination of cash and Andrews Group debt valued at about $17 per share.

Andrews Group's obligation to consummate the merger is subject to a number of significant conditions, especially details of the bankruptcy plan of reorganization.

As part of Marvel's Plan of Reorganization, Andrews Group would acquire from Marvel for $365 million in cash or Toy Biz Class A common stock, or a combination of the foregoing, newly issued shares of Marvel common stock representing 80.8% of the outstanding shares of Marvel common stock after giving effect to the acquisition.

If the Plan of Reorganization is confirmed, it is contemplated that Andrews Group would assign its rights and obligations under the Toy Biz merger agreement to Marvel and that Toy Biz would become a wholly owned subsidiary of Marvel.

Why bankruptcy?

Marvel announced that the filing had been necessitated by failure of the bondholders to reach agreement regarding alternative plans for the company's future. In its announcement, the company said Dec. 27, "Marvel will be able to avail itself of the orderly processes of the court to complete the reorganization and move forward without the necessity of bondholder consent.

Holders of Marvel holding company bonds were asked more than a month ago to support Marvel's plan by waiving certain restrictions contained in the bonds. However, the failure to reach agreement with bondholders, many of whom are so-called 'vulture investors' who recently accumulated the bonds, delayed Marvel from moving forward with its plan in a timely fashion."

Marvel Chairman and CEO Scott Sassa said, "We would have preferred to re-capitalize Marvel without having to seek the aid of the court, but the actions and positions taken by the bondholders prevented that approach. The key to putting Marvel on track for a dynamic and profitable future is a quick resolution to this situation, and we want to get on with it."

What does bankruptcy mean?

Sassa described what the action will mean for staffers, freelancers, printers, and retailers: "We are taking steps that are not typical in this situation. We intend to pay all of our bills, including those submitted prior to the filing, on time and in full, and maintain normal credit terms with our suppliers and licensors. We expect to continue doing business with our customers and licensees under normal business terms. We will fund and move forward with all of our new strategic investments, and employees will be paid in full and on time. We will gain a valuable new asset in Toy Biz Inc. and new funds that will allow us to face the future with strength and confidence. The recapitalization plan represents a strong vote of confidence by our principal shareholder and lender group in the fundamental strength and promise of the Marvel brand, our creative properties, business partners, licensing relationships, and strategic initiatives."

Under the proposed financial restructuring plan, Andrews Group Incorporated will invest $365 million in new equity in Marvel, allowing Marvel to make Toy Biz Inc. a wholly owned subsidiary of Marvel. In turn, Marvel's lender group has agreed to provide $160 million in new funds to finance Marvel's new strategic investment program and working capital requirements. Marvel's board of directors has approved the plan.

In addition to Marvel, the companies engaged in the publishing, licensing, distribution, and trading card businesses of Marvel filed voluntary Chapter 11 petitions Dec. 27.

Marvel's filing does not include Marvel's Panini subsidiary, which has its headquarters in Italy. Panini has had an operating profit each year since its acquisition by Marvel and will continue to operate independently and unaffected. The filing also does not include Marvel's Restaurant Ventures affiliate.

Toy Biz will also continue as an independent, publicly traded, New York Stock Exchange listed company, and its operations were unaffected by the filings; it closed up 1¼ Dec. 27.

Marvel Entertainment Group President and COO expresses confidence

By Maggie Thompson

In a phone interview with CBG Dec. 27, Marvel Entertainment Group President and COO David Schreff expressed confidence that seemed to border on enthusiasm, as he responded to the question, "What does it all mean?"

He said, "It means the preliminary plan is accepted: The step that was taken today was the court approving the first-day orders, which allows us to continue business as usual."

He had announced earlier in the day, "There will be absolutely no interruption of our publishing schedule or our development plans for TV and feature films, interactive products and services, licensing and sponsor partnerships, themed restaurants, and theme park attractions. X-Men and Spider-Man on the Fox Kid's Network continue to be top-rated animated series on television. Marvel Comics continues to dominate the business with a 37% market share and 16 of the top 20 comics on a monthly basis. Today's action positions us to build Marvel into an even stronger, more focused character creation company for today's fans and for those of the future."

He elaborated, "We have taken steps to reposition our business for the future by restructuring our finances today. We've done that by implementing a $525 million restructuring plan, and to do that we have filed a voluntary Chapter 11 petition. When completed, that plan will enable us to build our current business intact and to pursue a wide range of future strategic initiatives, including the acquisition of Toy Biz, investment in Marvel Interactive, continuation of our TV and feature film production development, continuation of our Marvelmania restaurant development, and other publishing and licensing initiatives.

"When taken together, Marvel will continue to remind our millions of fans that we're in business and we're still going to create the greatest stories through great creators.

"We are continuing to publish our full slate of comic books every month for our core fans. In addition, we are developing a number of new titles — titles for younger fans, to introduce them to comics super-heroes and other comics genres. There'll be more details on those as we're ready to roll them out."

What's in the works?

Asked whether the Marvel roster would include every comic-book title it now publishes, Schreff answered, "Yes, we are still publishing the entire slate. In addition, I think it's fair to say that, with our new management team in place, we're taking a fresh look at the 3500 characters in the Marvel library: looking at what's most cool, imaginative, and fun for today's core and younger readers."

Asked how long Marvel expects to be under bankruptcy protection, he answered that the process would take several months to complete as a legal matter. Trading in Marvel stock was suspended on the New York Stock Exchange Dec. 27, and trading resumed Dec. 30.

Reminded of January dismissals in 1995 and 1996 and asked whether any such staffing cuts were planned for January 1997, Schreff responded, "No, we're not planning any staff changes."

He concluded, "Since the new management team has been here only a short time, we are looking at all aspects of the business from the ground up, and distribution is one of those aspects. Over the coming months, we will make decisions as to what serves the field, including our customers, best. There will be a fresh look at distribution — to comics shops and newsstands — all across the board.

"This is an enormous vote of confidence by our principal shareholder [Andrews Group] and our bank group, all of whom believe the Marvel brand and all the characters in it have a unique contribution to make to the industry. And the new team is here to ensure that Marvel lives up to its potential, as the fans request.

"The most important point is that we really are absolutely planning no interruption of our publishing, TV, or other creative schedules. We're fortunate that X-Men and Spider-Man on Fox continue to be top-rated. Marvel Comics continues to be the No. 1 publisher in the field, and we will emerge from this as a stronger and more focused character-creation company for today's and tomorrow's fans."

Wall Street responds to bankruptcy

Dec. 27, reaction to Marvel's bankruptcy, company statements, and infusion of money drew quick initial reactions from the financial community. Marvel bondholder Carl Icahn of High River Limited Partnership said, "We find it unconscionable that the Andrews Group Inc. ... should attempt to use the bankruptcy process to wipe out its shareholders and its public bondholders from whom it borrowed over $800 million in good faith only a few years ago. We find it especially reprehensible that Marvel has adopted this course and completely ignored a far more equitable alternative that had been presented and remains available. It is patently clear that Ron Perelman has adopted this course to realize a windfall profit for himself at the expense of those to whom he owes a fiduciary responsibility." Reuters could obtain neither details from Icahn nor response from Perelman that day. Standard & Poor's lowered its rating on the secured debt of the three Marvel holding companies from single-C to D.

Leaner Marvel posts gain in average per-title circulation for 1996

By John Jackson Miller, CBG Associate Editor

Despite circulation increases on only six of the titles Marvel published sales figures for in 1996, the cancellation of weakly performing titles helped Marvel's average per-title paid circulation increase for the first time since 1993.

Marvel has printed Statements of Ownership including circulation figures in each of its titles shipping via Second-Class Mail since 1960. Marvel published figures in 22 titles in 1996 (constituting more than half its line of monthlies); the average paid circulation of all of those reported titles was 163,718. In 1995, Marvel reported sales on 34 titles for an average paid circulation of 124,692.

As reported in CBG #1201, Marvel broke with decades of comics-publishing tradition by printing its Statements two months earlier, meaning its reported 1996 sales figures likely only represent sales from 10 months at most. "Heroes Reborn" release months are not included in the 1996 figures.

Based on 597 statements collected by CBG and participants in its Circulation Scavenger Hunt, Marvel's 37-year circulation history is presented in the graph below. Data is not complete for Marvel for years before 1994; readers can assist CBG in its collection project by responding to our regular Scavenger Hunt Updates.

Ernie's Soap Box

Keep an eye on this space for words of wit, wisdom (and wishful thinking).

This week's Topic:

Why Mylar® ?

Why not polyethylene? Poly-others?

We do not preach that your comics will go up in a puff of smoke if you poly-nate them. But we do use plain logic.

1. The Library of Congress & the National Archives, after exhaustive studies, will not use any other other plastic medium for document storage except Mylar®.

2. Mylar® provides resistance to aging, decomposition, penetration by oxygen, gases, acids, insects and other bad influences on your comics. That resistance exceeds 300 times that of the other poly's.

Certainly Mylar® is more expensive than other plastics. But with Mylites™, at slightly more than 10¢ each, they are only a fraction of the cost of new comics. With the benefit exceeding 300 times that of other plastics, the logic of using polyethylene, polypropylene or poly-etc. falls flat on its face.

It is something like either buying seatbelts made from Nylon for $10 or buying seatbelts made from paper for $2. The price difference and benefit ratio is similar to Mylar® versus the poly's.

First, I want to thank Mark Waid, Peter David, and Jim Korkis for taking the time to answer some questions for my master's thesis.

I approached them out of the blue, and they were kind enough to schedule a few minutes out of their busy schedules to help me out.

Second, I am a fourth-grade teaching assistant in suburban Illinois and, as I mentioned above, am working on my master's thesis. The title is Using Comic Books During Silent Reading to Enhance Reading and Writing Skills. I am having a lot of fun doing the research and implementing it in my classroom but am having a little trouble. As you might guess, there hasn't been a whole lot written about the subject, and I haven't found as much as I would like in the way of resources.

I am looking for anything I can get my hands on that relates to using comic books in the classroom. I would greatly appreciate any help that anyone out there can give me, even if it means just pointing me in the right direction. This project is very important to me, and it has been a thrill sharing my love for comics with my students.

To your list of maddening word and grammar misuse please add, "I could care less." If you could care less,then obviously you must care. This phrase is a recent (last 25 years?) corruption of "I couldn't care less," which makes perfect sense. Also "everyday" for "every day," as in, "We have great prices everyday."

The non-word "irregardless" seems to be turning up more frequently, too.

Of course, neologisms keep our language fresh. Over just the last 25 years we've welcomed floppy disk, bookaholic, encryption, factoid, roadie, and televangelist, among others. But there is a difference between neology and ignorance. "Alot" is turning up entirely too often.

As to the specifically sexual "f" word being mistaken for a euphemism, yeah, I've noticed that, too. Other good examples are two specifically anatomical Yiddish words which refer to the male sexual organ and are used by Jews as insult words. It seems that the trouble starts when non-Jews hear them and assume their definitions based on context ("dummy, idiot").

CBG's timing with reporting The Maxx #26 stir in Mississippi and running The Adventures of Buzz Bumpkin ("Power & Something") in issue #1199 could not have been better. I didn't enlist to support Pat Buchanan in the GOP primaries, but people in the comics industry had better get their heads out of the sand and realize that the Oklahoma City prosecutions and now The Maxx #26 snafu aren't going to go away quietly.

Case in point from a personal experience: My son, who was 7 years old at the time, was getting into that great American tradition of comics collecting. One day, he advised me that he was going to his first signing at the local shop and came to me to fund the expedition. He told me the artist's name was Buzz. Not being familiar with the genre of the comic books at the time, I forked over the cash and he was on his way. Two hours later, he returned with his autographed copy of Vengeance of Vampirella. To make a long story short, his mom and I had a hard time convincing him that we felt Vampi wasn't for 7-year-olds. I joined him in his collecting endeavors after that. Now, at age 14, Vampi is one of his favorite characters that he's been allowed to collect for some time now.

I'm not a prude, but there's an age for each book that's on the market. Tekno Comics started the symbol system on the covers that gave an idea of the issue's contents. The video-game industry has started to monitor itself by putting ratings on game boxes. Don't give me that nonsense about the Comics Code. I don't think a system as complicated as the movie industry's has to be implemented for comics, but something has to be done.

The responsibility for whichcomics get into kids' hands has to be shared, from the creator right down the chain to the seller.

If it can figure out how to sell a bazillion variant covers for a "Bad-Girl" issue #1, the industry had better start working on a ratings system before the Comic Book Legal Defense Fund is running 50 conventions a year to stay funded.

Oh, So?

month ago. It was Donald Carruthers' letter in CBG #1201 that prompted me to complete it. I've long been disturbed at the "closed shop" feeling that seems to surround the writing aspect of comic books. To us outsiders trying to get in, it seems as though many of those already inside close ranks and try to keep us out. Of course, that's not true, but it is incredibly difficult to get constructive criticism and real advice on working your way in. But things could be different.

About three years ago, something incredible happened in the comics industry. No, it had nothing to do with Image, Marvel, DC, or even one of the larger independent publishers. In fact, the event seemed innocuous at the time, but its results have an impace on the industry right now and will have for a long time to come.

It's 1993. Image is cranking out comics and selling them like mad. Other companies are busy trying to find people who will be the next superstar artists. A teen-ager in Georgia, Shane Harper, decides to form a club for people who want to be comics creators. The idea behind the Amateur Creators Union was to find young creators and give them a place to work together and perhaps get their work published. Portfolio, a newsletter, was started to give a showcase for members' art, offer articles on the business, and provide a forum to help members form studios. By May 1994 the group had nearly 400 members.

The ACU published many ashcans created by its members but only managed one full-sized comic book before its untimely demise. The comic book was called Sketchbook and featured several short stories in black and white. Sales were minimal, but that didn't matter — these young creators had been published. After hundreds of non-supportive rejection letters and countless negative comments from friends and family, these young creators had had their work published and that fueled their desire for more. The knowledge that was gained from preparing work for publication helped these creators bridge the gap between wanna-bes and young pros. For some of them, the experience truly paid off.

Sadly, the union barely lasted two years but it set wheels in motion that can never be stopped. Former members of the ACU are working in the industry. From the ashes of the ACU, Chad Michael Ward created Oktober Black Press, a self-publishing venture that has successfully produced two anthology books and has two mini-series ready for this year. Jaymes Reed has started Femme Fatale Productions and is publishing his creation, Krystal. Mark Pajarillo is pencilling for Extreme Studios. Ale Garza is working with Top Cow and has a creator-owned series at Lightning Comics. Bill McEvoy has his creator-owned series at Lightning, too. Josh Jensen is coloring covers and doing some pencilling for Power Comics. Colin Fijal has a creator-owned series at Power Comics. Jon Long is working on his creator-owned series, The Rookies, for Oktober Black Press. Tony Lopez founded Diversity Comics, and Rob Kraneveldt is writing for Diversity Comics. Philip Xavier is an artist at Caliber Press, and Rebecca Baerman is close to having her creator-owned property hit the independent market.

There are hundreds more former members that I've failed to mention. From publishers to pencillers to writers and colorists, the ACU set up a training ground for the comics industry, the results of which are only just starting to be felt. Before long, a member of the ACU will be involved in every aspect of this industry, most effectively in the independent market. The idea of a training ground for tomorrow's pros is an idea that's worth exploring: a place where young creators can learn about creating comics, make mistakes, and take chances without the pressure of pleasing a publisher who must make a profit. Sure, the ACU had its share of problems and disagreements, but the concept was good and is sorely needed today. Shane, wherever you are, the people who support indy comics thank you. Now, if only we could get a similar venture started today that would help develop the creators of the next century.

The biggest problem we seem to have within the comics industry is attracting new readers. The Heroes Reborn maneuver by Marvel is just one such recent attempt. The answer to this is not just cheaper comics, but to release these cheaper comics through the appropriate outlets. Those of us who go to our comics specialty store will obviously pay more to have higher-quality paper, etc. for our comics. When we state that we want cheaper comics, we mean we want the particular titles that we collect to be cheaper.

I believe what the industry needs to do is bring back a variation of DC's old "Tales of" experiment. Remember how there were two Teen Titans and Legion of Super-Heroes titles, with the "Tales of" titles running one year behind the primary title, printed on cheaper paper and costing less? I am suggesting that publishing companies reprint some titles on newsprint at a reduced price and sell these issues one, two, or three months after the title is first released. These cheapo versions then need to be made available through other markets than comics stores. Put comics back into the supermarkets and convenience stores. Maybe even toy stores and bookstores in the children's section. (Hello, Diamond. Are you listening?) The distributor-retailer would probably have to be willing to offer a least a partial refund on unsold copies, as in the old days.

The purpose is to draw in new, young readers. Sure, at first they will only buy the cheapo comics, until they find out that they could be a month or two ahead of the current story by buying first editions at the neighborhood comics store. I can remember when I found out that there was such a creature and that it got the comics a whole month earlier than the 7-11 where I shopped. And it had back issues and posters and all kinds of neat stuff. And it would pull the titles I collected and hold them for me; I didn't have to forego my after-school activities every Tuesday just to grab the latest comics. And I got a discount on all the comics I bought. I never had to go to the 7-11 again (unless I missed an issue somewhere).

And kids bring their parents with them, which enables the store proprietor to talk to the parents and make recommendations on what the parents might be interested in reading.

The shops could also carry some cheapo comics. I think there are a few of us collectors who might pick up more titles if they were less expensive — or at least experiment with titles we don't normally read. The advantages are many. There should be little financial risk, since the creative costs are paid for with the higher-quality comics, leaving only royalties and production costs.

There may need to be some reworking of creators' contracts to reflect this new approach, but the industry can afford that growing pain at this point. We would attract new readers whom we desperately need. And since there is a sole distribution system now, there is someone who can be the point man for the industry with outlets. And it would (eventually) bring more people into neighborhood comics stores.

And certain comics are eminently suitable for at least the trial stages of this: Looney Tunes, Pinky and the Brain, Superman Adventures, Batman and Robin Adventures, and Star Trek to name a few (I never understood why these comics were printed on higher-quality paper, when they are mainly intended for younger audiences). These all have built-in marketing with their television ties. Archie and Gladstone would also benefit from a return to the grocery store.

The Baby Boomers now raising kids are looking for the things from their childhood to pass on. When they see their kids reading about the same heroes they read about in their youth, they will be likely to pick them up for their kids to read.

Just look at the recent success of the old Schoolhouse Rock and the explosion of Warner Bros. cartoon characters. Obviously, not all titles should be treated in this manner. But they, too, should benefit from the extended readership generated, if not immediately, then in five years or so, as the kids grow older.

As to what these cheapo issues would do to back-issue prices, who cares? The intent is to bring in more readers and, as long as we do that, our industry, hobby, and jobs will survive.

Re: CBG #1205 editorial:

Fragmentation will be with us for some time to come, and it's an economic factor that entertainers will have to take into account — and a few will take advantage of. How? By building devoted core audiences, for one thing — audiences eager to be the first to read the story, see the movie, play the game. By building core audiences who will want and are able to collect all the material no matter when they come across it . By — — creating a quality product. Look at the Star Wars saga, which even after 20 years is able to be a No. 1 video collection, as well as the setting for best-selling books based on the characters and series. Why?

First, the story is strong and transcends the time period — no matter what setting is used: science fiction, fantasy, Western, modern, etc. — the story can be transplanted into that era. Most of the best stories created through history are the same way: Shakespeare, King Arthur, Robin Hood, fairy tales, myths. In every case, the story stands the test of time.

Oh, So?

Second, all of these stories have believable characters. Each character has a realistic reason for doing what he or she does and seldom does something that doesn't fit within these motivations. This believability usually creates characters that, for the duration of the story, anyway, you feel are your friends, enemies, lovers, etc. And, because of the strong framework in the storyline, characters are allowed to grow and flourish.

Finally, pacing is everything. A story that has the correct pace is exciting and easy to follow. A pace that's too slow will bore you. One that's too fast will cause you not to care, because there wasn't enough in the story to draw you close to the characters. A story that's sporadic and fragmented will frustrate you. A story has to flow logically from one point to the next, and, in turn, these points have to lead a path to the end of the story.

Which leads to the end of my point:

Quality creates the core audience entertainers should be looking for. Quality, above all, brings core people back and new people in. With a consistently high-quality product, your core audience will feel comfortable with whatever you put out and will recommend you to others who will also want to buy your product — until the quality consistently falters, that is. And remember that quality takes time — it's unfortunate that sometimes people creating a good product have to stop before the fruits of their labor are revealed.

Too many poor short-lived projects succeed in this business at the expense of good ones that could have lived a long time, given a chance.

It would be interesting if Jeff Smith would do a story or two for Uncle Scrooge Adventures. Or perhaps the JSA and the place where the Golden Age Superman, Lois Lane, and a few others went to at the end of Crisis could become Vertigo titles.

I do have (as so many others do) recommended reading. This is not a "top 10," "best of," or "alternative reading" list. It's just a list of reading materials and one movie I think are entertaining.

• R Is for Rocket by Ray Bradbury: 25 years after first reading this book, I still find its stories captivating.

• Any book by Edgar Rice Burroughs. I just enjoy the way he wrote a book.

• Uncle Scrooge, Donald Duck, and other Disney duck material, especially Uncle Scrooge the Lemonade King, wonderful spirit-lifters I have reread for more than 30 years.

• Centerburg Tales and Homer Price by Robert McCloskey. I would love to see these stories done right in comic books — especially the stories "Experiment 13" and the story of the Super-Duper, a "real" super hero.

• And I recommend the movie The Uninvited. I know a great many of you may find this movie too dull compared to today's action thrillers, but a few of you may get goosebumps, as I did, when watching this old black-and-white movie at night, in the dark.

That's the list: nothing trendy or too adult. Some of Burroughs' books may be better read by teens, due to some "politically incorrect" portrayals and some violence, and younger folks may get frightened by The Uninvited, but none of this is over the edge, in my opinion.

[The Uninvited (1944, 98 min., directed by Lewis Allen, starring Ray Milland, Ruth Hussey, Gail Russell, Donald Crisp, Cornelia Otis Skinner, and Alan Napier) is a classic fantasy that too few people know. It's available at low prices on prerecorded videotape and repays rewatching. There are almost no special effects; the biggest shock comes when a door slams. The script by Dodie Smith and Frank Partos from Dorothy Macardle's novel is understated and tasteful. As a bonus, the fantasy is also well acted.]

At first, when I read your letters column and found numerous comics lovers lamenting that comics books weren't what they used to be, I'd be mystified at their conclusions. I thought that maybe it was me and I just didn't appreciate the work of the early writers and artists. They'd say Captain America and Spider-Man were ruined. The Hulk was unrecognizable, they'd say, or The X-Men had lost focus. Above all, their cry was that comic books were no longer fun.

Then the truth dawned on me.

These people were those "Marvel Zombies" I'd heard so much about. They were the ones who bumped into walls while buying nothing but Marvel comics. To them, it was Marvel or nothing.

Then I noticed that several of your columnists had the same problems with today's comics.

I must be one of the lucky ones. In the 1970s, when these zombies ruled and gave birth to more zombies, I was going to flea markets picking up Curt Swan Supermans and Steve Englehart JLAs and Cary Bates Flashes, I was enjoying the original, time-tested super-heroes.

Listen, I tried to like Spider-Man, but his job, his boss, all seemed derived from Superman. Captain America behaved like Superboy, and The Avengers were The Justice Society. And the premise of The X-Men was so weak that, to this day, I don't accept it.

The only difference among industry superheroes was that the Marvel characters appeared to have lots of personal problems. The zombies loved these flawed heroes and stayed faithful to them like soap-opera fans. but, by 1993, shouldn't most of these heroes have conquered their eccentricities?

Over at DC, they realized that all things must come to an end, so they knocked their big guys down to charge them up again. Heroes that careened around the universe for 30 years either were retired or retired permanently. Their absence made them more relevant to today's batch.

DC readers now expect the unexpected and look forward to their stories every week.

Wake up, you Marvel Zombies! Comics are wonderful today! Pick up Detective or Robin or Flash or especially The Legion of Super-Heroes from DC and you'll see.

If you're still not ready to take that step, try Dark Horse comics like Hellboy or Madman or Sin City.

From sheer storytelling power and fun, comic books have never been more enjoyable than they are now.

The trick is that when a company's news involves stockholder meetings, that is your cue to leave it for the lush valleys of today's comic-book landscape.

As a relatively new collector and a subscriber to CBG, I feel that I must make a comment on two of the statements made in CBG #1205.

First, in the Market Guide section, Paul Dyroff says, "Shows have almost turned into flea markets" and, "His customers generally expect discounts."

I have to agree with both of these statements; however, I feel that some form of rationalization belongs here.

My experiences with shows in North Carolina have been that they are well-produced, the dealers and collectors are friendly and helpful, and dealers expect customers to ask for a discount.

Pricing of some Silver Age issues has become such that without any discount there would be no sales. I have always worked with the premise that, regardless of what something is valued at, if you cannot sell it, then that item has no value. When you have an area where customers can see several dealers with the same goods in the same condition, then you are, indeed, going to have haggling and bartering.

I feel that this is usually enjoyed by both sides. If there is no discount or leeway, there may be no sales.

A prime example of no discounting and no sales is a shop where the owner is more interested in playing Magic than in dealing with customers.

On the wall of one store I know is a copy of Justice League of America #21 priced at $110. It has been on the wall for more than a year and has gone down in grade, due to sunlight and exposure. I would grade it between G+ and VG-. Asked about a discount, the owner said, "That is a key issue and cannot be sold for less."

It will sit there for another year with that attitude.

If you cannot sell it, it has no value.

Second, in the Oh, So? section, Michelle Nolan makes a great point about grading and the vast difference between Fair and Good.

This point could have been expanded to encompass the differences in all the grades. I have had several different experiences with dealers over grading and what I thought a comic book looked like.

I had one dealer grade an issue in Fine with a tear in the cover and chunks out of the lower right-hand corner of five or six pages. It was priced at $18, and the dealer said, "I marked it at $18, and that's what I'll take."

If you cannot sell the item, it has no value. A dealer with an eye for turnover will grade fairly and will be willing to make concessions on close calls in the collector's favor. 1,000,000 Comix is such a dealer. Gerry Ross' group grades strictly and always in the customer's favor.

Let me take this opportunity to state how much I enjoy reading the articles and comments in your magazine.

I have really enjoyed collecting for the eight or nine months that I have been doing it, and your magazine has helped in gaining insight and knowledge to aid in collecting.

Just a quick note on the mailing of CBG: I got issues #1202 and #1203 on Dec. 2 and #1204 on Dec. 3. I see that the other issues #1190-1200 were also running late. Mine have been running about 16 to 23 days for delivery. Apparently some of the other subscribers, as well, have been running late.

You still put out a great magazine and I look forward to reading it.

I was wondering if you have any information on the San Diego Comi-Con, dates, and whom to contact; it might seem early, but I took Don's advice and have been saving my loose change for the trip. I know you can't answer every letter, but, if you could publish some information about San Diego, it would be appreciated.

My second question is: Do you ever do shows on the East Coast like the Pittsburgh Comicon, or is Ohio about as far east as you get?

Maybe I'll get to meet you this year.

[As I hope you've seen by now, we ran a con supplement in #1206. In case you missed it, the 28th Comic-Con International: San Diego '97 is reachable at P.O. Box 128458, San Diego, CA 92112.

A self-addressed, stamped envelope and a request for information will probably provide what you need. Dates for 1997 are July 17-20.

I do show up on the East Coast from time to time. Stay tuned.]

I subscribe to CBG mainly for articles such as "The Many Media Appearances Superman." Of course, I love the regular columns and the ads, but without an occasional story about the early DC or Marvel characters, I'd probably drop it from my reading list.

One question: Do you know why the actors for both Jimmy Olsen and Catherine "Cat" Grant left the series? I loved Tracy Scoggins' depiction of Cat, and her departure left a hole that has yet to be filled.

[I, too, enjoyed Scoggins' performance and the character she played — and have no idea why her character was written out.]

CBG Customer Service Award - 1996

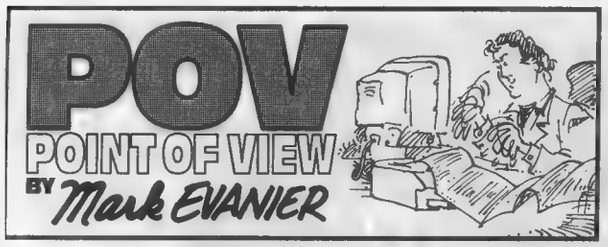
We also have a large selection of Golden, Silver, and Modern Age Comics, Supplies and More!! Send us your want lists! We have over 50,000 different comics still to process from the IRS Collection. Thousands of esoteric and hard to find Harvey, Gold Key, Whitman, Charlton, and others are still available!



Last week, we talked about the uncommon skill and heroism of the men and women who have diligently lettered this nation's comic books, armed with little more than a few Speedball pens, a bottle of Higgins ink or Black Magic, and some white paint for corrections. This week, we look at the future of lettering, which more and more seems to involve a Macintosh computer, a mouse, and Photoshop or some other software.

Hand-lettering breaks out of the balloon to become part of the art in this panel from Mad*.*

Computer lettering is the coming thing, and we can't stop it. I'm not sure that we want to. Lettering comic books on a Mac or PC has a number of advantages over lettering by hand. Here are 10 that occur to me off the top of my scalp:

1. Style. Most letterers-by-hand have one or two styles. With computers, you can select or design the perfect typeface for a given strip. In the near future, I expect we'll see as much variation in lettering as we do in art.

2. Consistency. Once you've selected the perfect lettering style for a strip, you can change letterers without changing that look. In fact, if deadlines are tight, you can distribute your 25 pages amongst 25 letterers and, as long as they all have the same font on their computers, it all hangs together.

3. Expediency. Traditionally, the letterer has to finish a page before the inker can start working on it. (Hand lettering can be done after, usually via paste-ons, but it's time-consuming and messy, and creates production problems.) But computer lettering is usually done separately from the inking. The page is finished and scanned, and then the lettering is added to the image in the computer, but not on the page. This means that the art can be finished without waiting for some letterer to complete his or her end of things.

4. Convenience for the artist. This goes with #3. Since the art can easily be finished without waiting for a letterer, that means that an artist who pencils and inks his own work can just sit down and do so at his own pace. He doesn't have to pencil the whole thing, then wait two weeks for the inker to finish and return it to him for inking. This can be enormously beneficial to some artists. The late Doug Wildey, for example, felt he did vastly better work when he could pencil and ink the art as one task.

5. Translation. When pages are reprinted overseas, someone has to go through and redo all the balloons, which can mean extensive art retouching and loads of cutting and pasting. But computer lettering is usually kept separate from the art. It's much simpler to, via computer, lay in the French or Spanish (or whatever) dialogue on pages without the English balloons.

6. Cleanliness. When art is being shipped off to a traditional "hand" letterer, it usually works like this: The page is drawn out in pencil, it goes to the letterer who letters in the copy, then it goes to whoever's going to ink the story. Even the best letterer disrupts the pencil art a bit as he handles it, rules his guide lines, roughs in his lettering, etc. I've worked with inkers who are forever complaining that the letterer had smudged the pencil art and/or gotten oil (from his fingers) all over the art. In fact, one of the best inkers I ever hired used to insist he would not work on pages that had been to a certain letterer who apparently had uncommonly-oily skin. "I can't use my favorite brush once he's handled the art," the inker told me. Again, with computer lettering, this is not a problem.

7. Paper preference. Most comic-book companies furnish illustration board to their artists, usually pre-printed with the margins in non-repro blue. This is not a matter of the company being generous — it's to ward off arguments. You see, some paper that is great for pencilling is bad for inking and vice-versa. Jack Kirby, for instance, disliked the paper that DC and Marvel furnished, but every time Jack bought his own paper, the inkers complained it didn't take ink well. Letterers frequently have the problem that the chosen paper stock may not be friendly to the specific tools they use. But since computer lettering is not on the actual art board, no one has to worry about their needs. The drawing surface can be selected wholly with regard to what's best for the artist(s).

8. Control. Most artists are not good at lettering. In fact, some of the best comics artists in history have been lousy letterers, and deface their own pages when they make the attempt. Instead of shipping it all off to a stranger, many of them are now able to do computer lettering in their own studios or to have it done under their supervision.

9. More control. It's much simpler to do lettering corrections and especially to move the balloons. An editor or artist can look at a page and say, "Move all the balloons down an eighth of an inch." On a hand-lettered page, that change could take someone an hour of cutting and-pasting and tampering with the artwork. On the computer, it takes around six seconds and the art is undisturbed.

10. Versatility and special effects. This is primarily of note on the big display lettering used for logotypes and story titles. In the past, many letterers weren't all that creative with such elements, nor could they have been expected to be, given what they were paid and how little time they were given to do their jobs. Most developed "stock" lettering styles for story titles — something they could quickly inscribe — and that was what we got. But with computer lettering, a whole word of type fonts is easily at the letterer's disposal; he or she can have a thousand fonts nestled away on the hard disk. These fonts can quickly be imported, tweaked, altered, configured, slanted, or otherwise tailored to the particular needs of a page, and even aligned to the perspective of an individual panel.

And there are probably a few other reasons. So, with all these advantages, was I all excited and thrilled at the prospect of seeing comic books lettered by computer? No, I was not.

I think lettering is an art form, particularly as practiced by the best letterers, some of whom I mentioned last week. There is something creative in what these folks have done...something that I could not believe could ever be totally matched by even the most creative hacker.

Ten years ago, if you had told me that computer lettering would become commonplace in comics, I'd have started painting protest signs (By hand!) and vowing to war against that abomination. The purist in me would have said that comic books oughta be lettered with Speedball pens and Higgins ink. (I also felt negative about inking with markers.) At the time, my reference for non-organic lettering was the LeRoy lettering done on the Wonder Woman comics of the 1940s and the EC comics edited by Al Feldstein in the 1950s.

The LeRoy lettering device was invented for jobs like architectural renderings — places where you want uniformity and precision, not personality. It consists of a stylus and a pantographic lettering form; no matter who uses it, the lettering comes out essentially the same. A gent named Jim Wroten did it, with his spouse assisting, for all those EC and Wonder Woman comics — and while the Wrotens probably did it as well as it could be done, the result still struck me as sterile and intrusive.

Plus, the artists, most of whom weren't great letterers, had to draw the word balloons and sometimes sketch in the story title and the occasional sound effect. (Years ago, a critic in an EC zine penned a lengthy treatise on how Feldstein usually eschewed the use of "crutch" devices like sound effects. The gent missed the point that the editor-writer may have been discouraged from putting in sound effects because those pages often did not pass through the hands of anyone who could letter decently.)

Harvey Kurtzman, the other main EC editor, didn't like the looks of LeRoy at all. He brought in Ben Oda to hand-letter his titles — probably a wise move. I can't imagine those wonderful, Kurtzman issues of Mad with the antiseptic LeRoy lettering. (And neither could the readers. When Feldstein edited a Mad imitation called Panic, he had the same artists working in the same style, but with the Wrotens doing the balloons. It looked all wrong, and he eventually switched over to Oda. Feldstein eventually employed Oda — or sometimes Wally Wood — to letter the story titles in his other comic books.)

A few years ago, when I first heard rumblings that some might try lettering comics with a computer, I thought of LeRoy lettering and winced. I also thought about a few attempts by Charlton Comics to save bucks and/or time — most likely, the former — by gerryrigging some sort of typewriter to output an all-caps display font. (Anyone recall those Charltons that featured a lettering credit for someone named "A. Machine"?)

Letter comic books on computers? No way, I thought, can they make that work.

But two things have budged me off that position. One is my increasing belief that artists need to be free to create their work the way they want, without anyone at any office telling them what size to draw, what paper to use, what tools to use, or how to divide up the workload with their collaborators. If I believe that, I have to believe they should be able to use computers if that's their choice. And the second thing that changed my mind was Richard Starkings.

Richard was a letterer of the traditional pen-and-ink school –

A brilliantly written graphic novel about the real human experience of living behind the iron curtain from one of Italy's leading comic artists (Deadly Dalliance, Hungarian Rhapsody). Jonas Finkel is growing up in communist Czechoslovakia, son a middle class formerly influential Jewish family leading a regular life bothering no one. Suddenly his father is arrested and disappears. His mother, left to fend for herself in an increasing array of bureaucratic entanglements forbidding her to even eke out a living, protests as best she can. The official reason is their bourgeois background. The real reason is anti-semitic resentment and the more she stirs things up, the more she and Jonas get in trouble.

Ask Mr. Silver Age

By Craig Shutt

Patsy's grand start in journalism

Honest, Mr. Silver Age has no idea how Patsy & Hedy, Career Girls #96 (October 1964) wound up in his collection. But as long as it's there, he can tell you about Patsy's first foray into the dog-eat-dog world of big-time newspaper journalism.

Dear Mr. Silver Age,

I've always been a big fan of that red-headed fireball, Patsy Walker! When did she make the jump to becoming a full-fledged reporter?

Lana L., Smallville

Mr. Silver Age says: By a weird coincidence, Lana, Mr. Silver Age just happens to have the issue that can answer that question. How it got stuck into his Silver Age Marvel collection all by itself is a mystery for the ages. It would certainly be a fine joke for anyone to think that Mr. Silver Age grew up reading comics like Millie the Model or Patsy & Hedy! Ha ha!

Patsy's grand introduction to the grueling world of journalism came about in Patsy & Hedy, Career Girls #96 (October 1964). The tale was called "Patsy in Love!" — which, I believe, was also the title of every other Patsy Walker story. But I wouldn't know for sure, since I didn't read these comics, so don't even bother asking such a funny thing. Ha ha!

Our two plucky leads, the red-headed Patsy and the raven-haired Hedy Wolfe had been teen-age rivals for many years. By this issue, they'd progressed to being career rivals at the Centerville Globe, where Hedy was a reporter and Patsy was an executive secretary.

Even so, Hedy was jealous of Patsy, because Patsy was far too happy working for Mr. Trent, her dreamy new boss. Patsy's ardor didn't even cool off when a letter arrived from her beau, Buzz, who was off in the Army.

"Dear Buzz!" she sighed. "His letters are so full of tenderness and warmth and feeling! I'll treasure them always! But how can I feel the way I do about Buzz and still have such a romantic crush on Mr. Trent?? How does a girl ever really know her own heart?"

I'll bet you're not at all surprised to learn that the Buzz-Patsy marriage ended in divorce, are you? [Ed. note: Later post-Silver-Age romances with The Beast and The Son of Satan didn't quite pan out, either.] But I digress.

Mr. Trent was so jazzed by Patsy's professional demeanor (oh, yeah) that he decided to send her out to cover a story. He asked Hedy to tell Patsy to cover a society tea at the Uptown Center.

Hedy, that raven-haired minx, instead told Patsy the tea was at the Downtown Center. Then Hedy headed uptown. What cunning!

Patsy was perplexed when she found no society tea at the Downtown Center requiring her newly discovered journalistic talents.

But as she puzzled and puzzled until her puzzler was sore, a nurse friend suddenly jumped out of an ambulance and ran for a nearby house.

"Patsy!" she cried. "Am I glad to see you! There were no interns available, so I had to come here alone! Hurry!„

Needless to say, Patsy's scoop on how she helped a woman deliver quadruplets was front-page news, while Hedy's hot reportage on the society tea didn't make the cut.

"When will I learn not to try any more sneaky schemes?" Hedy sighed. Not in this issue, as we're about to learn.

Take it from Mr. Silver Age, this is a must-have double-bag item for all Patsy & Hedy fans in the audience, and you know who you are. That demand probably won't be increased much once you learn this issue features such exciting one-page features as "Patsy and Hedy Fashion Pages" and "Patsy's Heavenly Hair Styles."

Frankly, the best one-pager was "Patsy & Hedy's Hats." Mr. Silver Age would tell you that his favorite style was the Town 'n' Country Top, but, of course, he would be joking about that. Ha ha!

Point of View

he lettered Batman: The Killing Joke, among many other gigs — and a good one. I don't know if he was getting a vision of the future or if he was getting carpal tunnel syndrome or both, but he worked out the logistics of lettering on the Mac and the end result is leagues better than I would have dreamed possible. His Comicraft company letters dozens of comics per month, and does so with an incredible artistry and efficiency.

His fonts are brilliantly designed, and he has a number of them — a font with a slight hint of "high tech," a font with a bit more "cartooniness," and so on. He has sometimes designed a new typeface — no small task — specifically for a new project. This makes it possible to "cast" the lettering for a comic book, selecting just the proper style to compliment the art.

(Comicraft sells many of its fonts, by the way, in both PC and Mac format. There's probably an ad elsewhere in this publication. I'm going to get around to ordering 'em all one of these days for my PC; if you're doing comics and can't letter, so should you.)

Others — such as Todd Klein and John Costanza — have also reminded me that, with a creative soul in charge, typography is just as valid an art as calligraphy. The bad computer lettering I've seen — and there's a lot of it out there, mostly on independents — is not a failure of technology but of the person at the keyboard. Actually, my biggest problem with computer lettering is not the lettering but the balloons, which are often a bit too precise and elliptical to feel like one with the artwork. I'll bet this is solved before long.

Perhaps, if there were a dozen Artie Simeks plying their trade in comics today, I might feel otherwise. There is a certain "organic" feel to the best hand-lettering — an unobtrusive quality that works with, not against the illustration. But again, when computer lettering feels that way, it just means that somebody doesn't know how to do it well.

At last year's San Diego Con, Todd Klein — one of the best letterers this business has ever seen — was showing around a page and challenging folks to identify which balloons were done by hand and which on his computer. I picked them out, but I sure had to look closely. For all practical purpose, he had done exactly the same thing he did with a pen, only he did it on a Mac. Others have not tried as slavishly to re-create hand lettering, but the results do not offend my purist genes as I would have expected.

Ultimately, I have to concede that what you gain with computer lettering may more than compensate for what you lose. At least, I wouldn't quarrel with any creator who felt that way. I've even steered a few projects to Comicraft and was very happy with the results.

If you follow this column, you're going to get sick of seeing me say this: There are many ways of creating a comic book. Carl Barks did not work in the same manner (or even with the same tools) as Jack Kirby, and Will Eisner does not work the same way as either of them. Even the two main EC editors, Feldstein and Kurtzman, had totally different working methods — from each other and from Stan Lee and Julius Schwartz and Chase Craig —

Over the years, the "assembly line" mentality of the major publishers has tended to force artists and writers of varied talents into rigid job descriptions. When a new guy takes over Spider-Man, they expect him to work just like the guy before him. This was always a problem, but it's going to get worse as technology expands the options for writers and artists. There will be more ways in which they can collaborate, more ways in which they can create their work. For example, some artists are even experimenting with drawing completely on computer, no inking necessary.

Computer lettering and coloring are only the beginning. It can all make for an exciting creative revolution, just so long as we all remember two things. One is that there is no one right method to create a comic book —

-- and the other is that some things will always be better done by hand. All of these computer advances just give us more ways to create. I just hope no one way ever becomes the only way.

COMICS BUYER'S GUIDE

Bill Willingham welcomes readers to coventry

By Eric Reynolds
Fantagraphics Books

The title of the story is "Thirteen Dead Guys Named Bob." The plot? A private detective is hired to track down a rogue angel of death; a portly protagonist enjoys an invigorating game of Beavis and Butt-head-style frog tennis; an imp from Hell pauses for a quick snack and a roll in the hay before getting down to business; and the actual heroine of the comic book, searching for a long-lost god, has a tête-à-tête with the world's last living Sphinx.

No, this isn't a transcript of notes found on a cocktail napkin in Grant Morrison's pocket after a few pints too many. It is, however, the synopsis of the soon-to-be published second issue of Fantagraphics' new series, Coventry.

In 1984, Bill Willingham was creating his own super-hero team, The Elementals, for Texas Comics. By the time The Elementals had moved to Comico in the mid-'80s, The Elementals had become a critical and commercial success due to his art, attention to detail, and inimitable sense of humor. Over time, he left his first creator-owned series (eventually selling the rights to the Elementals to Comico) and started another, the 11-issue Ironwood series for Eros Comics — as well as moonlighting on a short run on Green Lantern.

Willingham is now at Fantagraphics, devoting himself full-time to Coventry. The first issue was published at the end of October, and in the pages of CBG a few weeks ago, Maggie Thompson commented, "The art is excellent and packed with detail, the concept is terrific, the plot is intriguing, the script is delightful ... I passed the preview around the office, to unanimously positive reaction. Don't miss this."

Tyrant creator Steve Bissette emphasized the same thing that Willingham employed on The Elementals and Ironwood: a sense of humor.

Bissette said, "There's a new spot to check out on the map of 1990s revisionist gothic comics — Bill Willingham's Coventry. I sure enjoyed my first night's stayover in Bill's new digs," adding that the series is "a pleasant change of pace from dour Vertigo country."

Willingham said that his favorite comparison to the Vertigo line was Bissette's. "My impression of Vertigo is that every Vertigo title is so damn impressed with itself, taking itself too seriously. I don't think that's the way to go. Coventry may cover some of the same subject matter ... maybe. But is it covering this subject matter the same way? I hope not.

"I expected comparisons to something more like Hellboy, which is a terrific, wonderful comic book, because it's so much fun. I want to have fun with Coventry."

It may seem unlikely that a company like Fantagraphics, long associated with alternative and underground cartoonists like R. Crumb, Peter Bagge, Chris Ware, and Gilbert and Jaime Hernandez, would be responsible for Coventry. On the other hand, it might not be as unlikely as it sounds.

Coventry Editor Kim Thompson said, "We've always been committed to quality comics, whether they appear to be mainstream or alternative. As it happens, we've had our biggest successes with the more 'alternative' comics, such as Love and Rockets, Eightball, and Hate, and that's colored the public's perception of what Fantagraphics is all about — but remember, we also published Usagi Yojimbo and Dalgoda (a full-color science-fiction comic book) and crime comics such as Torpedo. Despite our reputation for focusing on edgy, underground-type material, our tastes are really quite eclectic. We've been publishing Bill for years, and I love his work."

Why did Willingham choose to take his supernatural comedy-drama to a publisher like Fantagraphics? "The first time I worked with Fantagraphics was with Ironwood, which actually was a part of the Eros line. The entire deal for that book was hammered out in a 15-minute phone call, enabling me to immediately get to work," Willingham said.

Willingham reported that Coventry "will be my 'dead smart' series, meaning the comic book I do until I'm dead."

What is it about the comic book that made him say he wanted to spend the rest of his life on it?

"I'd been wanting to do a lot of different things since the end of Ironwood. I had originally planned to do a series called Potter's Field, which I'm not going to go into much, because I'll probably end up doing it in Coventry. With Coventry, I sort of shoehorned all of the ideas I had into one title. The way I've set it up, I can do anything, because the concept is general enough that I can tackle all of the ideas racing through my brain."

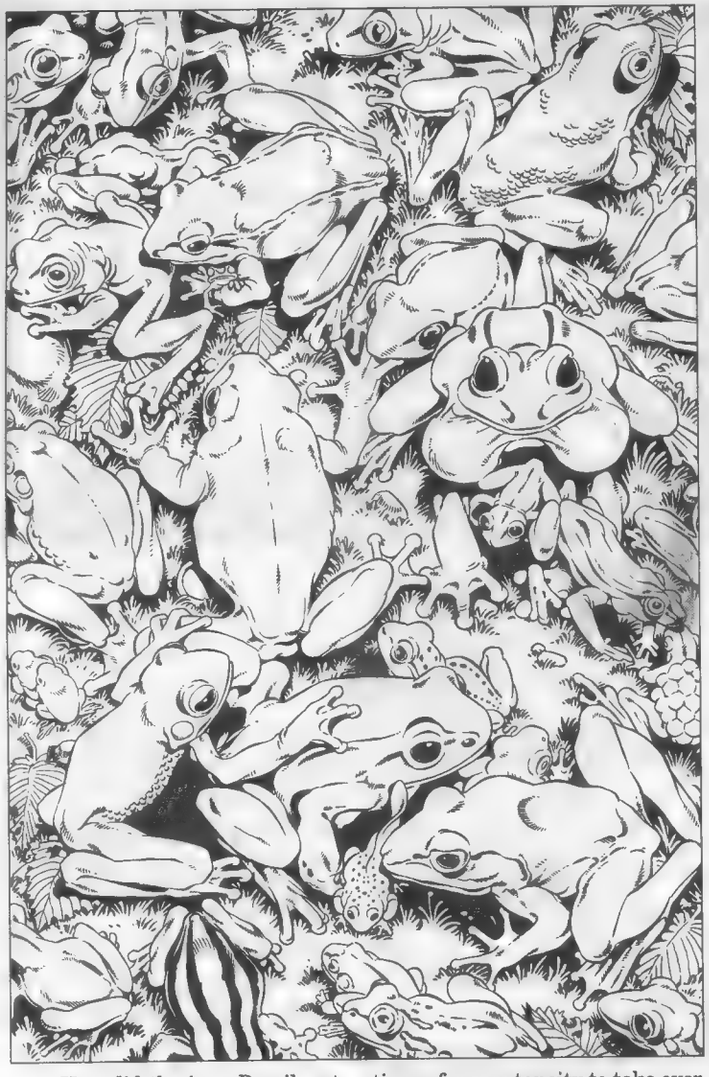
What is Coventry? The title is named for the location, the heretofore little-known 51st state of the Union (location: between Washington and Oregon; capital: Salem; principal export: red tape). It's where the two main characters — two supernatural troubleshooters, "Licensed Private Hero" Claudia Nevermore and her faithful assistant William — reside.

In the first issue of what Willingham said will be an eight-issue story arc, appropriately titled "The Frogs of God," Claudia and William begin investigating a proliferation of frogs in the otherwise unremarkable town of Hunley by interrogating some of the local demons and demigods, including The Thing in the Closet. In doing so, Claudia and William don't even notice that a few other peculiar and potentially dangerous phenomena have begun erupting around them, Ghostbusters-style.

Coventry is rich with subplot and characterization. As Paul Chadwick, creator of Concrete, said, Coventry is "a model of what a good comic book should be. Handsome art, dry wit, effortless storytelling."

A close reading of the first issue reveals at least a half-dozen subplots, including:

- Who is the God Kuzun, and why does he or she want to bury Hunley with frogs?
- What, if anything, does an unsolved murder in Hunley have to do with the plague?



• How did the imp, Beezil, get unleashed in Hunley after having lain dormant since the 17th century, and what does he have to do with the plague?

Will these questions be answered? "The second issue reveals even more subplots," Willingham said, "but the rest of the story should clearly resolve them all. My hope was that at the end of the first issue, people would have only questions, and that at the end of the second issue they would have only more questions, but with the explicit promise that they'll be resolved in kind."

Willingham's commitment to making Coventry his life's work shows through in the research and thought put into the series' background. For example, the first issue contains "A Tourist's Guide to Coventry," a meticulously put together glimpse into the world Willingham is creating.

"I worked out the physical dimensions of the state of Coventry in advance," he said, adding, however, "Many of the particulars were not. It gives me a frame to work within, while allowing, at times, for spontaneity to take over and flesh things out."

Willingham said he had sent away for a number of tourist brochures to help him in the creation of the first issue's Tourist's Guide. "I'm actually not as happy with how it came out as I would have liked, although readers have responded well to it," he added. "The thing is, all of the guides I looked at were really boring, very bland, and wouldn't offend anybody. A state's best attributes were usually not to be found in these things. I'm afraid that too much of that worked its way into my version — it's too successfully boring."

This is Willingham being too hard on himself. The Tourist's Guide is actually an entertaining, often hilarious glimpse into his fresh, new world, with the fantastical and mundane colliding at every juncture. To wit: "[Eastern Coventry] is a year-round playground ... You can dig for gems, fossils, and mundane eggs in the vast fields near Xenon. After all the digging, quench your thirst with one of the region's famous microbrews."

The guide includes a map of the state of Coventry, much of which Bill swiped from the state of Oregon. Why Oregon?

"I wanted to use, sort of, a real location, in the sense of using real terrain and features," Willingham replied. "I didn't want it to be so fictional you couldn't imagine where it would be. It was a choice between the Northwest and somewhere in Pennsylvania, which are two areas where I've spent much of my life. In the Northwest, there are many interesting things that I knew I could fit into a story." (Willingham now lives in Texas.)

Willingham is a treasure trove of eccentric Northwest history, capable of reeling off bizarre but true anecdotes and facts at the drop of a hat — revealing the level of thought put into Coventry's background. "Just across the border of Oregon, on the Washington side of the Columbia River, there's an exact replica of Stonehenge. You know the phrase, 'What in Sam Hill?' Sam Hill built that mini-Stonehenge, and he also built an actual castle nearby. The Queen of England was coming for a visit to the region, and Sam Hill figured you can't have a queen without a castle, so he built a castle. That's the kind of character I'd love to work into Coventry at some point, and, even though I may never get around to it, some of the odd history of the Northwest at the very least serves as an inspiration," he explained.

But why Oregon and not Washington? "I'm from Seattle," he said, "and I figured I'd rather mess with my nearest neighbor than my actual home."

The state of Coventry is split into five territories — The Coast, Pandora, Mephisto Valley, Mount Herod and Eastern Coventry. Of the five regions, Pandora is where all of issue #1's action takes place. (Willingham noted that the town of Hunley is just outside of the city of Pandora, to the northwest.)

Pandora is known as "The Supernatural City," Willingham revealed in his Tourist's Guide, and it looks as if the second issue will mostly occur in Pandora, as well, as an Angel of Death has disappeared and Heaven wants him found before he depopulates the entire region. Throughout this, the plague of frogs is still spreading, and it might not be too long before other regions are threatened and forced into the storyline.

Despite the initial focus on Pandora, it's clear from the Tourist's Guide that Willingham has a lifetime of stories about every area in Coventry percolating inside his imagination. He has detailed descriptions of each region, affording each a unique personality and style that immediately captures the reader's imagination. (He even included a letter from Coventry's governor, Ruby Poole.) The Tourist's Guide also offers clues and insight into the larger plot of the main story and makes for a thoroughly engaging back-up feature that enriches the experience of the main story.

Not content to stop there, Willingham said he also plans to include editorial pages in future issues; these will include many "behind the scenes" looks at the creation of Coventry, while also letting him mouth off on any topic dealing with the extraneous business of putting out a comic book. (Many readers found Bill's letters-page screeds to be a highlight of Ironwood.) Among other things, upcoming issues will include a glossary of terms, characters, regions, and organizations relating to Coventry.

In the first issue's editorial, Bill wrote that the price of his and other independent comics are high these days. (Coventry, while in black-and-white, is printed on matte-finished paper with cardstock covers and runs 36 pages with no ads; the price is $3.95.) "The big comics publishers are always going to be able to put out a comic book for less money than us small-fry," he said. But he promised a few things: No assembly-line art. No fill-ins by other artists. No ads. "If I can't beat the price other comics put on their covers," he concluded, "I'll settle for a little more quality between the covers."

One of the most curious elements of the first issue is the appearance of a strange, Looney Tunes-esque imp, Beezil (also featured on Willingham's original cover for this issue of CBG), who

After last being on Earth in the 17th century, Beezil suddenly finds himself in the 20th century.

"My hope was that at the end of the first issue, people would have only questions, and that at the end of the second issue they would have only more questions, but with the explicit promise that they'll be resolved in kind."

— Bill Willingham

"... doing it one panel at a time ensures that there are no superfluous panels, and each panel is equally important, which is good discipline for me."
— Bill Willingham

has mysteriously popped into Hunley from the 17th century.

"One of the first letters I received was from a guy who said he loved everything about the book except Beezil. He said he was so thoroughly wrapped up in the realism of it all, and the imp's last-minute appearance completely took him out of that," said Willingham. "He said that having this imp appear was like being suddenly thrust into a cartoon.

"But that's exactly the effect I wanted, so I wasn't completely sure if I was disappointed by his response, because it was entirely what I was aiming for." Willingham did promise that, even though Beezil's appearances would continue in this vein, his place in Coventry would be revealed and "it all makes sense." And Beezil's nature turns out to be a lot darker than might have been assumed from the first issue.

Beezil's inclusion seems particularly strange, given some of the more mature themes of the book. Not "mature" in the fashion of his previous book, Ironwood, but actually, well, mature. (Although the first issue is suitable for a wide audience, Willingham requested that a "Mature Readers" advisory appear on that and every subsequent issue, in anticipation of upcoming rougher scenes.)

"One of the ongoing themes in Coventry is the theory that, if all of this magic did exist — I'm certainly not the first person to speculate about this, but here's my take on it — it would be as heavily bureaucratized as possible," he said. "I'm obviously giving, in a way, my view of contemporary politics and government. In the first issue, William mentions the flood of paperwork that must be filed before he and Claudia can take on their supernatural investigation." Although there are big differences between our world and Coventry, the small things apparently remain the same.

But don't expect a dogmatic comic book. The second issue, scheduled to ship in January, continues to reveal the adventure that lies ahead. In the first, an unexplained murder took place in Hunley amidst the frog epidemic. In the second, its relevance to the plague is hinted at. "There's a character named Max introduced in the second issue," Willingham said. "His former partner, Cortez, is on the police force and is the cop investigating the murder. This murder drags Max into some of the things Claudia's involved in." Willingham hinted that Beezil's relevance would also be touched upon, when a certain doctor of forensic sorcery, Martin Sumner, is introduced as the one who unleashed Beezil on Pandora.

One of the most interesting aspects of Coventry is a production technique that will be completely invisible to readers. Rather than draw each page as a unit, Willingham is rendering the book panel by panel in a small sketchbook and assembling the pages later. "I started this on a lark, because there was this certain type of sketchbook that I really liked but my local art store wouldn't stock. I had to buy something like a dozen at once to fulfill the store's minimum order," he explained. "So I had all of these sketchbooks lying around, and I remembered reading an interview with Chester Brown where he said he did each panel one at a time and then would cut and paste the pages together later. I just opened a sketchbook up one day and started Coventry."

But why do it this way? "It was only later that I discovered the advantages," he explained. "For one thing, I can take the book anywhere and work on it. It's kind of nice to sit in a pub and draw my book. Plus, I can refer back to things easily, because all of the original art is here and accessible, in my hands. Finally, doing it one panel at a time ensures that there are no superfluous panels, and each panel is equally important, which is good discipline for me." In fact, the only downside (other than a bit of production work for Fantagraphics, which has to assemble the pages panel by panel) is that as a result, there are no original art pages to be sold — although, if someone wanted to buy the entire sketchbook someday and get a whole issue of Coventry in one fell swoop — well, he said he's willing to entertain the notion.

So what comes after #2, scheduled to ship in late January? "No. 3 should be out in the spring," Willingham said, "and it will continue to unfold things."

Willingham added that William will probably fade more into the background, while Claudia and Max become more fully defined characters. A character named Leslie Maxwell, a low-rent PI type, sort of a lesser-Claudia, will be introduced and brought into focus. Beyond that, Willingham said he's keeping his mouth shut.

"I have some ideas," he commented, "including a redoing of Dickens' A Christmas Carol, where the ghosts come in and take a nice wild liberal, set him straight, and make a good fiscal conservative of him, in the true spirit of Christmas. Or maybe not."

Kim Thompson said, "This quarterly schedule is a little slower than we'd hoped at first, but, aside from getting his sea legs on the project, Bill's moved a couple of times in the last few months, and that kind of spiked the schedule. Once he settles down, we're hoping to go bi-monthly — which, for a comic book of this scope by a single creator, would be a pretty amazing achievement."

GREENWICH WORKSHOP

We're very pleased to offer you two new sale books from the renowned Greenwich Workshop, James Bama and Howard Terpning. We've also been able to restock copies of the Lovell book, which sold out unusually fast when first offered at these incredible savings. All three books are top quality throughout.

THE ART OF JAMES BAMA

By Elmer Kelton. Known in the comics field for his classic paintings for the Doc Savage paperbacks, James Bama left commercial illustration to become one of the all-time great Western artists. Aside from a long out-of-print softcover, this is the first major collection on Bama. It is outstanding. Full- and double-page reproductions throughout. Out-of-print. Greenwich Workshop/ Bantam.

Hey Dealers, Why the Pittsburgh Comicon?

What makes the Pittsburgh Comicon so special? That's an easy question to answer: Our dedication to make the Pittsburgh Comicon the #1 show in the East.

In three years, the Pittsburgh Comicon has grown by leaps and bounds and this year will be even bigger.

We have hordes of great talent and events planned for this year and we're going to let people know about it!

Besides advertising in all the major industry publications, we will be distributing 1.8 million flyers and you'll be able to find our advertising in 200 McDonald's in surrounding areas.

Plus we'll be producing one of the highest quality program books you'll find at any comic convention.

If your going to only one Con this year, make it the fastest growing Con in the industry: The Pittsburgh Comicon

It's a mad mad mad mad whirl!

Rob Walton conspires to amuse with 'Ragmop'

"I wanted to do something that people would have fun reading, that would surprise them at every possible turn."
— Rob Walton

The first eight issues of Ragmop are available in current printings from your local retailer — as is Book of Ballads and Sagas.
Or write Walton at:
Planet Lucy Press
49 Roseheath Ave.
Toronto, Ontario M4C 3P4
Canada

By Steve Ginsberg

Rob Walton has filled his comic-book stew that is Ragmop with politics, presidents, and popes; salted it with satire and sarcasm; and thrown in a Nazi with a cheesy mustache and a lesson on the Big Bang Theory and evolution by professorial Darwin the Dinosaur for good measure.

"I wanted to do something I would want to buy," Walton said, "something I enjoy doing, and something that people will have fun reading, that would surprise them at every possible turn."

Walton has regularly been serving up his irreverent commentary on authority figures and established institutions since June 1995, when issue #1 of Ragmop sold out a print run of 3000 copies. It's now well into multiple printings.

"This was just before everything went exclusive," Walton mused. "I actually made money."

The lowdown

Shapely and seductive, confused and enigmatic, deadly and daring protagonist Alice Hawkings takes readers on a mad romp of around-the-world mayhem, murder, and international conspiracy theories.

When Norway's pre-eminent geologist is found in the Antarctic "...boiled to death in beezle-nut oil," the answer to such a mystery just might lie under the Dr. Seuss hat. Then again, maybe not.

The question posed by the Grinch-like monster under the hat is, "Where are the dinosaurs?" Why, with Alice in outer space, where else?

Cut to the holy House of Assassini and a bloodbath of religious proportions, where all heck has broken loose, leading to the summoning of "The Incorruptibles."

All this frenzy is in the cause of finding the elusive "O-Ring," which just may hold the key to humanity.

Walton said he is committed to making sure his readers finally learn the answers to the mysteries he's been presenting. "While I'm happy with sales," he said, "I would do this comic book regardless, because I want to finish the first story arc." He hinted that a move to Image's "non-line" of alternative titles might be possible.

The road to Ragmop

While his current venture has received increasing critical and fan acclaim, Walton has been drawing since he was a kid creating his own comic book, "Enzo the Energy Man."

"I loved the medium from the beginning," Walton said, adding that, in his teens, he had graduated from his own "Enzo" to reading Classic Illustrated, "which gave me a grounding in plot, character, drama."

It was while working at The Silver Snail in Toronto in 1986 that Walton first made his mark in the comics industry by publishing his first comic book, Pork Knight, a satire of Frank Miller's Dark Knight.

Timed to catch the black-and-white boom, this "serious satire" about personal and artistic creativity and freedom sold almost 35,000 copies. Despite its commercial success, however, Walton decided not to continue it.

Next came Bloodlines, published first by Aircel, and then by Vortex. After that, Walton went to work in television full-time. He's done animation work on such series as Beetlejuice, Dog City, and Ace Ventura.

It wasn't until Matt Wagner introduced his Grendel Tales that Walton was drawn back into comics.

"At the time, I got to meet Matt Wagner in Montreal," Walton said, "and he was familiar with my Bloodlines. I gave him a proposal for a Grendel story called Devil's Hammer, which he accepted."

In his inimitable style, Devil's Hammer is rampant with issues of religious and philosophical introspection, the roles and responsibilities of society, and questions of good versus evil.

Not so coincidentally, these themes are predominant in his own Ragmop. "I felt I had to come up with something to capitalize on the interest generated by Grendel Tales," he said.

His Ragmop story grew out of his love of Grant Morrison's writing on Doom Patrol, he said. "There was a character, 'The Toy,' in one panel, then it was gone," Walton said wistfully. Drawing on his interest in religion and philosophy, and remembering his encounter with Morrison's creation in Doom Patrol, Walton worked up a story proposal for DC.

Based on that character he had been so enamored with in a brief appearance in one panel, Walton conceived the Alice Hawkings character and developed the story "Dream Child."

After receiving no response from either DC or Dark Horse, Walton was faced with the choice so many others have had to confront: "Either drop out of comics or self-publish." Walton chose the latter, forming Planet Lucy Comics, named for his supportive wife.

Keeping the character and concept, but changing the name from "Dream Child" to Ragmop, Walton offers his opus in a 12-issue story arc he calls a "mini-epic."

On 'Skade'

In unstable times, sales of Ragmop have remained consistent, he said. Taking on some animation work this past summer in order to help finance future issues, Walton has continued to meet his stated schedule, in addition to working on another project that involves his love of mythology.

"Skade" is Walton's opportunity to revel in the land of yore and indulge his more lyrical and poetic side. Featured in Charles Vess's Book of Ballads and Sagas, "Skade" is high drama and adventure in more chivalrous and wondrous times, accompanied by art rendered by Vess himself.

"Skade" was first conceived as an origin story for Red Sonja, which Walton intended to sell to Marvel. Having met Vess in 1986, Walton had found they shared an interest in mythology. "We had lots of talk about," Walton said. Vess wanted to draw the story and help shop it around. The shopping didn't go well in this country, and finally, "Charles found an interested publisher in Europe, who promptly went bankrupt," Walton said with a chuckle.

Armed with a finished product and no publisher interest, "Skade" remained shelved for about 10 years. Finally, with Vess forming his own publishing company, Green Man Press, Rob's "Skade" began in issue #1 of Book of Ballads and Sagas.

For Walton, it's the best of both worlds. "I enjoy both comedy and drama, and I'm satisfying both with Ragmop and 'Skade,'" he said.

DC COMICS 1938-1995

We have recently purchased a large 1955 up DC collection. The inside 1960's DC's are especially nice. Although many are graded VF/NM most copies are near flawless (a word I don't use lightly!" I find it hard to find VF/Nm DC's from any period pre 1970 so I was especially gratifying to find such nice runs. A books are discounted as usual as per our discount chart!

THE WINNEPEG COLLECTION

All books in this ad came from the Winnipeg Collection, an original owner collection that surfaced in Winnipeg, Canada. This collection consists of a complete run of Marvel comics and a near complete run of DC comics (from 1960 on) purchased by original owners Dennis Kjolso and Joseph Krolic. The collection runs through 1996. The collection was sold in its entirety to Showcase New England in December of 1996.

The books in the collection itself are characterized by incredible white paper and bright colors. Many of the books in the collection are near perfect including many of the early numbers. Some of the earlier books can be further identified by a light pen name on the cover. Most of the covers are stunning in appearance. Collectively, it is the most significant run of Silver Age books to appear in the 1990's. Among the most notable books in the collection are exceptionally high grade copies of Amazing Fantasy #15, Amazing Spider-Man #1, X-Men #1, Tales of Suspense #39, Daredevil #1, Avengers #1, and Tales to Astonish #27.

All books will include a certificate of authenticity.

Happy New Year. Do you have any idea how much I have longed to say those words?

One of my comics industry buddies was calling the year we'vejust survived "199SUX" and no one ever disputed that appellation.

How could they? As years go, especially for our small community, last year really stunk up the place.

But 1996 is, at long last, over. It's time to put it behind us and, once more with gusto, get on with our lives, our careers, and our beleaguered industry. It's time for us to stop whimpering like a bunch of whipped dogs, stand up on our hind legs, and showsome teeth.

Show some teeth? Heck, it's time for us to start biting.

The start of a new year is a splendid time to take inventoryof who we are and what we have. For one thing, I'm not a kid anymore. If I had had any hopes of clinging to that delusion, they were well and truly dispelled by the birthday presents I received from Sainted Wife Barb and the Wonder Kids. They gave me a desk chair and a pair of slippers.

Don't misunderstand me here. I'm not complaining. I needed and wanted both gifts. It's just that there is no getting around the fact that these are grown-up gifts.

Who am I? I'm a father and I'm a husband and I relish these roles. I come from great stock: decent, hard-working parents who gave me the educational and moral foundation to form the values Ilive by today. I have a loving and supportive family.

Quick digression.

I have to tell you about my sister Carrie. She's a teacher. She's also the mother of two great kids, Ernie and Joe. OK, my brother-in-law Larry has something to do with that, too, but he's not the star of this story. Carrie is.

Carrie loves dolls and toys. She's collected them for years and understands their true worth. Like many people, she was morethan a little disturbed by the Tickle Me Elmo feeding frenzy of the past Christmas season. Unlike many people, she had an Elmo and she wanted to do something positive with it.

So she called up a local radio station and offered the doll for auction with the money to go to a worthwhile charity. By the time the station auctioned off Carrie's doll and the other Elmos that were donated as a result of her example, $1500 had been raised for the charity. That's one of the two new reasons I'm so proud of my big sister.

The other reason is that she got to talk about bunny poop onthe air. It's like this:

Over the weekend, Carrie brings home her first-grade class's pet rabbit. It was early Monday morning, and she was cleaning the bunny's cage before taking it back to school. The phone rang and it was the radio station making arrangements to pick up the Elmo.

They asked her what she was doing. She told them. They recorded the conversation and played it on the air.

Carrie is now known as "the bunny lady." She is the hero of her school. She is officially "cool."

OK, maybe it wasn't that quick a digression. But it is payback for the time Carrie stuffed me into a toy box. I feel somuch better now, don't you?

Who am I? I'm a guy who has an amazing number of friends to show for his 30 years as a comics fan and professional. That was recently brought home to me when some of my fellow CAPA-alpha members decided to commemorate my birthday with a "Toys for Tony" campaign. CAPA-alpha was and is the first and finest comics apa. I was a member in my teens and rejoined several years ago.

I didn't have any idea they were doing this until I began to get books and tapes and assorted other doodads in the mail. Eacharrival added a few more smile lines to my aging visage. I don'tmind. They give my face character.

Who am I? I'm a guy who doesn't go looking for a fight but isn't afraid to get into it when one starts knocking on his door.

A few columns back, I wrote about Linda Pesarchick, the librarian who resigned her position with my local Medina library in protest of the library's open access policies. Pesarchick, hiding behind a duplicitous "protect the children" posture, objected to various books and movies available at the library.

I wasn't surprised to see local members of the self-anointed Christian Coalition rally to Pesarchick's side. After all, one of their members had been well and truly trounced at the polls in her attempt to win a seat on the school board. They needed a new forum for their radical right agenda.

Here's another non-surprise for you. Coalition members have formed a "new" group called Citizens for Protecting Children and, though they deny that the Coalition itself is involved in library issues, they are again trying to control access to information in opposition to our constitutional rights.

Even if I believed the Coalition was honestly concerned over the protection of our community's children, the issue still comesdown to this: which of us has the right and the responsibility to"protect" my children. I say it's me.

So, after I send this week's column to CBG, I'll be calling the library to enlist in this battle. I've heard the Coalition's message of divisiveness and intolerance. I will not meekly allow it to become the law of my land. They'll see my teeth an instant before I take a bite out of their tight little heinies.

Who am I? I'm a writer who loves the comics art form in all its gaudy and profound wonder but who has foolishly allowed somepersonal and professional disappointments to keep me on the bench at a time when this thing of ours — art form, hobby, industry, you decide — needs its best and most passionate advocates and creators to show their teeth. No more.

It's 1997 and I'm licking my chops.

See you next week.

TABLETALK

THE COMICS BUYER'S GUIDE TO GAMES

compiled by Brent Frankenhoff and John Jackson Miller

Reviewed by Joyce Greenholdt

Consider this a continuation of last month's look at current CD-ROM titles available. Again, when looking at computer software, the most important thing to check before buying is the system requirements, to make sure your computer can actually run the game. Most of these games are available for both PC and Macintosh computers. The minimum system requirements (except as noted with individual titles) for PCs are: 486/33 MHz processor; 8 MB RAM; SVGA graphics; and double-speed CD-ROM. For Macintosh programs, you'll need at least: 68040 Macintosh or Power Macintosh; System 7.0 or later; 8 MB RAM; and double-speed CD-ROM. Most of these games also require a mouse or other pointing tool. Again, be sure to pay close attention to the minimum system requirements — and the manufacturer's recommendations, which often exceed the minimums.

On the table:

Advanced Dungeons & Dragons CD-ROM Core Rules

Timelapse

Westworld 2000

BattleTech

AD&D Core Rules, $59.95, TSR, ISBN 0-7869-0602-2

System: 20 MB hard drive space; MPC-compatible sound; Windows 95 or 3.1.

If this CD-ROM suffers from anything, it's from overambition. Not only does it contain the text of the core rule books for Advanced Dungeons & Dragons: Player's Handbook, Dungeon Master Guide, Monstrous Manual Tome, Tome of Magic, and Arms and Equipment Guide; it also includes: utilities for mapping; converting dungeon maps to 3-D; character generation; random monster, treasure, and encounter generation; customizing treasures or random encounter charts; a simple paint program for making player handouts; and even a short computer-animated movie.

It's got so much, in fact, that it's a little overwhelming to try to get the hang of. Fortunately, the online help (an animated "wizard") is pretty good, too. However, there are details that seem to have slipped by the designers, and encountering them is all the more annoying because the package seems so all-inclusive. It's easy to pick out things you could have lived without, if only they'd polished another part a little better.

For example, you can set up a customized wilderness encounter chart and then use it to generate random encounters. So far, so good — a great way to prepare for a game ahead of time, in fact. But, when it comes to encounter generation, it seems that for encounters with most humanoids (orcs, dwarves, goblins, etc.) the program can only generate a "lair" encounter — so, instead of running into, say, a hunting party of six to a dozen goblins, according to this program, your players will only encounter goblins by the caveful — 80 or more monsters, sometimes, with appropriate allies, noncombatants, and so on (and treasure to match).

You can alter the number of critters in the encounter — shrink 'em back to the hunting party you had in mind — but, as far as I can tell, in that particular part of the program, you can't delete any of the treasure. Which means you have to generate more appropriate treasure separately, cross out the treasure on your encounter printout (which can go on for several pages), and write in or use a separate treasure printout. At this point, it's almost easier to sit down with a pencil and dice and do it the old-fashioned way. However, I have read that there are "patches" available online to fix some of the bugs in this program, though I have not had the time to track them down and try 'em out.

But, once you've familiarized yourself with the program's capabilities and limitations, this can make a first-rate dungeon master's assistant — before and during a game (assuming you can run games in your computer room). Just to be able to run a computer search of the rules for a table or bit of information is well worth the price — which is less than the cost of buying the printed versions of all the rule books included here.

Timelapse, $54.99, GTE Entertainment

Audience: Age 6 and up

System: 486/66 MHz; 16-bit Soudblaster compatible sound; external speakers; Windows 3.1 (Windows 95 recommended).

This is a graphic adventure game that my husband, Mike, and I picked up after seeing a short feature story about it on the Sci-Fi Channel. We were impressed by the production values (many parts were filmed, like a movie, then digitized) and intrigued by the premise. We were not disappointed.

As the game begins, you get a message from your friend, archaeologist Alexander Nichols. Long ridiculed (by everyone but you, of course) for his theory that the ancient civilizations of the Egyptians, the Maya, the Anasazi, and Easter Island are somehow liked to the lost city of Atlantis, Nichols says he has now found proof on Easter Island: a mysterious device that appears to be a gateway to ancient times. Arriving on the island, you find nothing but his journal and his camera. Your job in Timelapse is to locate the portal and travel between ancient civilizations, hoping to find both Nichols and a way to return to the present.

While the game is rated as being suitable from children as young as 6, I believe that's because of the lack of violent action. Some of the puzzles are fiendishly complex and would baffle and frustrate most children of my acquaintance. In fact, Mike and I are completely stuck on one puzzle at the moment, though I have hopes of working out a solution before resorting to the clue book (which is available separately).

One nice touch in the game is the camera, which you should find early on. You can use it to snap pictures of clues as you find them and flip through the pictures whenever necessary, reducing some of the tedious note-taking and sketching that many similar games require. However, your film is limited, so be choosy.

So far, the internal logic of Timelapse has been absolutely consistent, and the attention to detail shown by the designers enhances the playing experience. The soundtrack (and I use the term deliberately) also adds to the entertainment value.

If you enjoy this kind of mental challenge and have the patience to work your way through a variety of puzzles, from figuring out simple mechanisms to assembling clues from several sources to find a complex solution, here's a game that offers many hours of enjoyment.

Westworld 2000, $39.95, Byron Preiss Multimedia, ISBN 1-57260-004-7

Audience: Age 17 and up

System: Pentium 75 MHz; 40 MB available hard drive space; 16-bit MPC-compatible sound; Windows 95.

This was simultaneously the most complex and the buggiest of the Byron Preiss CD-ROMs that I looked at this month. It didn't lock up my system; the bugs were mostly annoyances, graphics-display problems that were easily gotten rid of by walking to a new location.

Based on the movie by Michael Crichton, Westworld 2000 puts you in the amusement park of the future, where visitors can play the part of a gunslinger, a samurai, or an intergalactic spy in one of the park's three areas — Westworld, Samuraiworld, and Orbitworld — where they interact with the park's robots. It's all perfectly safe — unless there's a malfunction…

Needless to say, you're soon racing through the 3-D screens of the program, trying to escape from or blast your way through berserk robots, attempting to find a way to shut down the park before it's too late. It's a combination of shoot-'em-up action and simple (though not necessarily easy) puzzle-solving — managing your limited inventory and finding the right combinations of items that will help you win the game.

I had fun playing this game, although I felt it could stand improvement. The graphics were good, but the animation had a fairly low resolution, so when you got close enough to a robot that it would speak to you (and maybe drop a vital clue), all you could see of the face was a moving blob. Also, your aiming point, a set of crosshairs in the middle of the screen, sometimes gets lost against the background.

Unfortunately, the mouse is only used in the initial menus; it doesn't function in the park, so, if you don't have a joystick, you must rely on the keyboard to move and aim. Call me spoiled, but I would prefer being able to pick up and manipulate items with the mouse. As it is, I have the feeling a joystick would make it easier to play this game, but I don't have one.

Still, Westworld 2000 is a good, challenging game, and a few tweaks could make it a great game.

Reviewed by Brent Frankenhoff

BattleTech trading card game, Wizards of the Coast.

Cost: $8.95 for 60-card starter set with one die; $2.95 for 15-card booster packs.

Number of players: Two or more.

Length of game: Half an hour to an hour.

Ease of play: The rulebook and cards themselves tell you almost everything you need to know; the rest is just common sense. Strategy plays an important part in deciding where (and, sometimes, when) to place certain cards on the table.

Strife factor: Medium, along the lines of, "You trashed five of my cards, so I'm going to hit you with everything I've got."

I looked forward to Wizards of the Coast's adaptation of FASA's BattleTech gaming system into a trading-card game, and the finished product definitely lives up to my expectations.

It has a lot of similarities to Magic: The Gathering, and some of the enhancement cards bear a resemblance to Magic cards like "Unholy Strength" and "Fog." One important difference is that the goal of the game is to deplete your opponent's stockpile of cards to zero so that, when he has to draw a card and is unable to do so, he loses the game. Although this is one of the ways to win in Magic, it is seldom used, because most Magic games are over before too many cards are played. Another important difference between Magic and BattleTech is that BattleTech players are limited to a maximum deck size of 60 cards, while 60 cards is the minimum deck size allowed for Magic.

There were two elements of BattleTech that really made it shine for me. The first was the large rulebook that is packaged with the starter deck. Since that deck is packaged with a six-sided die, the box it comes in is larger than a normal card deck, allowing Wizards to include a larger rulebook with larger type, a boon for those of us with poor eyesight.

The other improvement — and one I would like to see added to Magic at some point — is the ability to "construct" 'Mechs by paying their building cost in installments. For example, if a 'Mech costs nine assets and you only have five assets available for use, you can use those five assets in one turn and then pay the remaining four assets on a subsequent turn. It is a good way to allow larger 'Mechs to be used and could facilitate the use of larger creatures in Magic.

There are six phases to a player's turn of BattleTech: Untap, Draw, Repair/Reload, Deploy, Missions, and End of Turn.

Like Magic, cards are tapped and untapped as they are used and as the player's next turn starts, respectively. During the Draw phase, two cards are drawn by the player. Damaged 'Mechs are repaired during the next phase, and 'Mechs that have used their missiles or other special abilities (if available) are reloaded.

During the Deploy phase, construction costs are paid for 'Mechs and other items the player will use. Unless a card specifically says that it does not count as a deployment, only two cards are allowed to be deployed per turn and, with the high construction costs of many units, this doesn't normally present a problem.

After a 'Mech is constructed, it can be sent on a mission. For example, it can attack another player's 'Mech, guard the card stockpile, or attack an opponent's stockpile. This last action is the most preferable, because, of course, the goal is to deplete the other player's stockpile — and attacking the stockpile is about the only way to do it.

Multiple attacks can be carried out in a single Mission phase, which can force an opponent to commit his forces to an early defense, only to find himself defenseless when his opponent unleashes another attack.

I found the rulebook easy to understand, and the sample turns contained in the back were helpful in illustrating the way the game is played.

Gameplay moves along at a pace slightly slower than Magic, but this is only due to the additional strategy elements of placing one's 'Mechs and is not a detriment to enjoyment. I had a lot of fun playing BattleTech and look forward to additional supplements. Now if I could just get more armor and air support for my 'Mechs.

Decipher has signed a new, exclusive licensing agreement with Paramount's licensing division for trading-card game expansions based on multiple Star Trek TV programs and feature films, the company announced in December.

The license is effective for 1997 through 2000 and includes The Next Generation, Deep Space Nine, Voyager, First Contact, and other feature films based on these TV series that Paramount may release during the term of the agreement.

Decipher plans to incorporate the new properties into its existing Star Trek: The Next Generation card game.

Fleer/SkyBox International has installed a toll-free phone line for consumers and retailers to obtain information and rules clarifications on its Star Trek: The Card Game, based on the original Star Trek TV series.

Anyone calling (888) PHASER1 (742-7371) will be greeted by a recorded message requesting the caller's name (and store name, for retailers), phone number, time of the call, and the nature of the question or information requested. The recording is monitored Monday through Friday, with calls returned by members of the Star Trek game team before 6 p.m. EST the next business day.

The company also has a support line for its OverPower game, (800) OPRULES.

Mayfair has announced plans to revive its Chill horror role-playing game with a new line-up of products, an overarching storyline that extends to the year 2000 and beyond, a newsletter, and opportunities for fans of the game to publish short stories and reports on Mayfair's SAVE Web Site and in upcoming Chill products. The new storyline involves SAVE, an organization devoted to destroying creatures of the Unknown. After suffering heavy losses in previous Chill releases, the reorganization of SAVE will encompass a section of each new product. Envoys (players) will be invited to write field reports documenting the growth of SAVE in their area of the world. Clues to the storyline's final climax will be hidden in magazine articles, newsletters, the SAVE Archives on the Web, and in Chill releases.

Wizards of the Coast plans to release its fifth edition of the core Magic: The Gathering cards this spring. Of the more than 400 cards in the fifth edition, nearly 200 will have new art and nearly half will come from expansions not included in Magic: Fourth Edition, including Ice Age, Chronicles, Homelands, and Fallen Empires. The cards will be sold in 60-card starter decks and 15-card booster packs.

"We wanted a card mix that would appeal to current magic players," said Mike Elliott, lead developer of Magic: Fifth Edition. "Card that were played infrequently were replaced. In addition, we balanced the strengths of the colors for improved sealed-deck tournaments."

'Rib': From mini-comic to comics shops

By Andrew M. Ford

Rib started out as a mini-comic in 1992.

If I remember correctly, I was sending out submissions as though there were no tomorrow, when I came across a company called Not Available Comics. Its sole proprietor was Matt Feazell. One day, while looking through the endless rejection letters I was receiving (because, as you know, it's very difficult to break into full-size comics), I came across a letter from Feazell telling me that he self-published mini-comics and that I should, too.

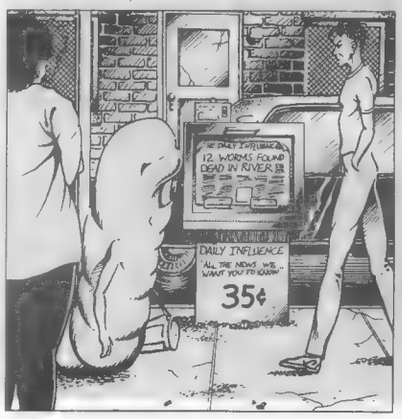
This was the first time I had ever heard the term "self-publishing," not to mention "mini-comics." Needless to say, I was intrigued.

Feazell sent me a list of people to contact, and, before I knew it, I was hooked into the mini-comics network like you wouldn't believe.

It was then that I did my first Rib mini-comic. So many people had been trying to do super-hero stuff for so long that I thought it might be cool to come up with something original. Actually, I just sat down and thought about what I wanted to say, regardless of what others thought.

It was a big moment for me. Original thought is not as common as you may believe it to be in this industry. Following trends is easy; it takes guts to try something new. Anyway, I knew that there were things I had experienced in my own life that I wanted to incorporate into the story but I didn't want to do it in an autobiographical fashion.

I have nothing against autobiographical comics; I just felt that it was being done sufficiently at the time and wanted to do something more unusual. Then I thought about all the social and political issues I wanted to explore and began working on a way to talk candidly about such topics as religion and prejudice without offending anyone too much. While it's true that I am doing this comic book for me, I'm not out to hurt anyone's feelings. I knew that if I used a specific ethnic or religious group, no matter how much research I did, I'd stumble over some stereotype and lose half my audience. (I didn't want to do that!) Then I thought about creating a new race — a different species, really. Unfortunately, furry animals had been done to death, and aliens were passé. Then one day, while brainstorming with my father, he said, "What about worms? Has anyone done a story about worms?" It sounded good to me, and I went with it.



Now, I don't know everything. I'm sure that many worm stories have been done over the years. I just hadn't heard of any and thought it was unusual. With that in mind, I began producing Rib as a mini-comic on a pretty regular basis.

A few years passed, and people picked up on what I was doing and wrote about it. Yes, 1994 was a pretty big year for me. I was mentioned in magazines and won the award for best mini-comic from a cool little zine called Small Press Feedback. As you can see, things were really rolling along nicely.

The only problem: I was a writer, not an artist. I had a pretty good story going, but, if I was going to even consider taking it full-size, I would have to find a competent artist.

Around this same time, I was working on a big Rib mini-comics annual with small-press creators Dan Hickman and Eric Hampton (who has since died much too early in his life; he'll truly be missed). I needed pin-ups and a cover illustration for the thing, so I started contacting small-press artists from all over to help me out. (That's what the small press is all about — at least for me). I asked Michael Kelleher to do a pin-up for me of Rib and Max (another main player in my story). He did, and I was blown away. I couldn't wait to run it.

It was around this same time that Eric Hampton was killed in his hometown of Minneapolis. This put a stop to the annual (as well it should have). I didn't feel comfortable having someone else finish Eric's art, so I just scrapped the whole thing and decided that I would run whatever art he had finished, without words, when I collected the Rib minis in a collection, dedicating the whole thing to him.

At the same time, I was editing and publishing a full-size science-fiction and fantasy comic-book anthology called Cosmic Waves. I saw all the untapped, under-appreciated talent floating around the mini-comics small press and decided to try and pull as much of it as I could together in the form of an anthology title. Unfortunately, after three issues, the orders dropped very low, and Diamond had to stop carrying it.

With Cosmic Waves gone and Rib on hold, I decided to go through all the stuff I had received for the Rib annual to see if I could salvage some of it. That's when I came across the Kelleher Rib pin-up again. I told him that his art was great and asked if he would be interested in helping me take Rib full-size.

Luckily for me, Michael had enjoyed all the Rib minis and was eager to help take Rib to the next level. With that worked out, I wrote a script for the first issue, Michael drew it, and a few months later we self-published it under his company at the time, Dilemma Productions. This was great, because it really got our names and work out to the comic-book public.

A handful of publishers started to become interested in Rib. After fielding a few offers, I decided to continue self-publishing it, but under my new banner of Bookmark Productions.

The new Rib #1 was solicited for a September 1996 release, and the orders came in at a little under 2000 (not bad for a new comic book out of nowhere). On top of all that, Joe Pruett asked Michael and me to come up with a Rib vignette for Negative Burn #40 from Caliber Press.

That's my story. I hope any of you mini-comics small-pressers out there hoping to take your work full-size someday can take a little solace from the fact that it has been done, and quite recently.

Also remember, though, that it takes patience to make it in this industry (and I'm telling myself that more than anyone, because I've yet to really make it myself).

It took me four years to get my creation off the ground. That may sound long, but it was a good thing for me. During those four years, I had a chance to really develop my characters and story, so that when you're reading it, you can (I hope) feel depth behind everything.

Comic books are a magical blend of words and pictures and the most powerful form of self-expression I've ever come across.

We've only scratched the surface of what can and will be accomplished through this wonderful and amazing art form.

• I have a clutch of Gladstone titles here, all of them fun four-color reading for kids, some of them absolutely terrific for all ages. All of them actually have the words "Walt Disney's" as the first two words of the title. Gladstone's meticulous detailing of credits where available is equalled only by its delicate coloring (by such folks as Scott Rockwell, Katy Llwellyn, and Summer Hinton) of ducky material.

Most of the issues contain 32 pages from cover to cover. Uncle Scrooge #302 (Feb 97, $1.50) contains Carl Barks' "Monkey Business" (from Walt Disney's Comics & Stories #297, Jun 65) and two stories with art by Tony Strobl: "The Telltale Hand" (Uncle Scrooge #77, Oct 68) and "Abner the Actor" (Beagle Boys #8, Jul 69). In the days in which all Disney character work in comics was done pseudonymously (as "Walt Disney"), Barks was known to his fans only as "The Good Artist." Others have pointed out many merits of duck artists other than Barks (and their stories will entertain kids especially), but he remains in a class by himself. Sometimes in Barks stories Donald is a total klutz; in others, he is a genius. This is one of the "genius" stories — in which Donald can tune bells to affect behavior, and Scrooge assigns him to scare off rice-eating birds. It's not one of the all-time greats in the Barks canon, but don't miss it.

Donald Duck Adventures #42 (Feb 97, $1.50) contains Paul Murry's "The Saga of Sourdough Sam" (Donald Duck #62, Nov 58) and "The Kangaroo Kid" (art by Tony Strobl, Donald Duck #92). The Murry story consists of an entertaining adventure involving a disappeared prospector and a golden geyser.

Uncle Scrooge Adventures #43 (Feb 97, $1.50) contains Carl Barks' "The Queen of the Wild Dog Pack" from Uncle Scrooge #62 (Mar 66). This is a

"book-length" story, though not one of the all-time greats. Again, not to be missed, if you haven't read it. It's Junior Woodchucks in Australia, solving the mystery of missing sheep.

Donald Duck #300 (Jan 97, $2.25) is a 48-page celebration of this milestone for the duck and his nephews. Its stories are "Hero 300" (art by Mau Heymans, translation and American script by David Gerstein), "Andold Wild Duck and the Runestone's Curse!" (story and art by Marco Rota, American script by Gerstein), and "Disco-Ducks" (story by Fred Milton and Daan Jippes, pencils by Jippes, and inks by Milton). The stories aren't by Barks, but each is delightful in its own way. (The Heymans story, a tribute to the comic-book adventures of the heroic Donald, features a couple of full-page panels that reward close study, one of which could function as a loving quiz of identifying duck characters all by itself.) The "Andold" story will probably be most relished by adults, thanks to ongoing wordplay (e.g., "He's a Swede! See how Sweden sour he is?") — in a tale of Viking hordes and an enchanted runestone. Jippes and Milton are among the best creators working in the Barks tradition, and "Disco-Ducks" features a sleepy Donald trying to get some rest but not lose Daisy.

Gladstone has been trying to keep prices on these titles low, so that new, young readers can enjoy its stories. I note that Donald Duck's average paid circulation for 1996 is only 34,193 — for some of the best stories the field has to offer. These stories are industry standards, benchmarks of Done in One storytelling, with each episode stand-alone, all-ages entertainment. Buy them for your friends and relations. For yourself, too.

• Another sort of stand-alone comics project continues to be ably represented by DC's Paradox Press imprint — in this case, The Big Book of Thugs (1996, black and white, $14.95, ISBN #1-56389-285-5), an unbelievable bargain at the price. You know I love this series — but remember that the reason I do is that it's so well done. This volume (as is the case with the others in the "Big Book" series) functions not only as an entertaining reference book but also as an anthology showcase of some of the finest artists in the comics field today. My favorite in Thugs (written by Joel Rose, by the way) is "The Doolin Gang," illustrated by Russ Heath (and why don't we see more by this tremendous artist these days?). It'd make a great film, with exciting twists and turns. But you may have another favorite. Such as, say, Phil Foglio's "Black Jack Ketchum Gang." Great.

Friends of Lulu to host 'Here to Save Comics Conference'

The Friends of Lulu NorCal has scheduled its first "Here to Save Comics Conference," for Feb. 1 at the Hyatt Sainte Claire in San Jose, Calif. The one-day conference, which runs from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., offers panels and workshops for both comics professionals and fans.

To register for the conference, send $40 per person along with the full name, address, and phone number of each attendee to: Friends of Lulu NorCal, P.O. Box 460461, San Francisco, CA 94146.

The conference is also looking for volunteers to help out both prior to and during the event. For more information, contact Lee Binswanger at (415) 824-0213.

Comics collectibles offered in mail bid auction

Several pieces of original art, animation cels, and a first edition Mickey Mouse book are among the lots scheduled to be auctioned off in an Early American Numismatic Auctions mail bid auction which closes Jan. 18.

Lot #180 is five pages by Frank Robbins from an issue of The Invaders, Marvel's mid-1970s title featuring the exploits of Captain America, The Sub-Mariner, and The Human Torch during World War II. The estimated bid for the lot is $200 to $300.

Six pages of original art from T.H.U.N.D.E.R. Agents by Mike Sekowsky make up lot #190, which also has an estimated bid of between $200 and $300.

Lot #216 contains two original Beetle Bailey strips by Mort Walker from the mid-1970s. The estimated bid for the near-mint strips is $150 to $200.

Twenty-five animation cels featuring The Smurfs are in lot #762. Many of the cels also have their corresponding pencil drawing included. The lot's estimated bid is $2500 to $3500.

Lot #763 is a production cel from the 1960s Filmation-produced Superman series. The cel shows Superman gesturing with his left hand. The painted cel has an estimated bid of $300 to $400.

A first-edition copy of The Adventures of Mickey Mouse from 1931 is lot #801 and has an estimated bid of $1500 to $2500. Published by the David McKay Company, the book has a number of colored illustrations and illustrated endpapers.

In addition to the comics-related materials, the auction also has a wide selection of autographs, book, numismatic memorabilia, and other items. Early American Numismatic Auctions Inc., can be contacted at P.O. Box 3341, La Jolla, CA 92038, phone (619) 459-4159, fax (619) 459-4373.

If a state is not listed in this issue's calendar, it is because we received no show listings for that state for this time period.

If you are planning to attend a show some distance from your home, we advise you to call the show's promoter for any last-minute changes and information.

Gold & Silver Age BARGAIN BIN

The Bargain Bin is your chance to advertise pre-1980 comic books in COMICS BUYER'S GUIDE at 50% off the regular Super Trader advertising rate.

Here's how it works:

- All books advertised must have been published prior to 1980.
- All books listed in your ad must be priced at $10.00 or lower.
- Bargain Bin ads must run in the Super Trader section of COMICS BUYER'S GUIDE. Bargain Bin ads should be designed by you, the advertiser, on 8-1/2" x 8-1/2" paper. We will reduce your ad to fit a super trader size in COMICS BUYER'S GUIDE. You may run as many Super Trader ads as you want in the Bargain Bin issue of COMICS BUYER'S GUIDE.
- The Bargain Bin ads will appear in the February 21, 1997 issue of COMICS BUYER'S GUIDE (#1214). Advertising deadline is January 28, 1996. Mail date for the issue is February 5, 1997.

And Now The Best Part!

Bargain Bin ads cost only $50.00 for each 8-1/2" x 8-1/2" (Super Trader) sheet used. (Regular cost for this ad space is $108.00. You save over 50%.)

Call John Diser, Cheryl Clementi or Jim Owens today for more information on COMICS BUYER'S GUIDE'S Bargain Bin issue.

Get Your Copies Today!

1997 COMIC BOOK CHECKLIST & PRICE GUIDE
3rd Edition
by Maggie Thompson & Brent Frankenhoff

Get the guide more collectors depend on for comic book pricing. New and updated, this 1997 edition puts you at the leading edge of comic pricing, from 1961 (Silver Age) to the present, and includes a detailed checklist for easy cataloging and grading of your collection. Listings of independent publisher releases and hard-to-find limited editions set this guide head and shoulders above all others. Includes useful histories on major comic book characters. It's from the same comics experts that bring you COMICS BUYER'S GUIDE, comic fandom's #1 weekly newspaper.

COMICS BUYER'S GUIDE 1997 ANNUAL *6th Edition
By the Staff of COMICS BUYER'S GUIDE

The 1997 edition in this series features a colorful look at Image Comics, the successful new kid on the comics block celebrating its 5th Anniversary. The popular in-depth State of the Comics Industry Report takes a look at what went on in the comics field in 1996 —sales, cover prices, and other useful and interesting statistics. The Annual also includes a Comic Book Publishers directory with addresses, Weeks of Wonder, a chronological look at the history of comics as reported in the pages of Comics Buyer's Guide, and columns from the popular weekly columnists writing for Comics Buyer's Guide.

SUPER TRADERS

Super Trader ads are available for $108.00 each. Super Traders are designed by the advertiser on 8-1/2" x 8-1/2" paper. We reduce the ad to 5" x 5" size. Super Trader ads are a low cost form of advertising. Because of this, CBG does not typeset, screen photos, add logos, artwork or credit card symbols to Super Trader ads.

SUPER TRADERS

Super Trader ads are available for $108.00 each. Super Traders are designed by the advertiser on 8-1/2" x 8-1/2" paper. We reduce the ad to 5" x 5" size. Super Trader ads are a low cost form of advertising. Because of this, CBG does not typeset, screen photos, add logos, artwork or credit card symbols to Super Trader ads.

TRADERS

Trader ads are available for $40.00 each. Traders are designed by the advertiser on 8-1/2" x 8-1/2" paper. We reduce the ad to 3-1/4" x 3-1/4" size. Trader ads are a low cost form of advertising. Because of this, CBG does not typeset, screen photos, add logos, artwork or credit card symbols to Trader ads.

TRADERS

Trader ads are available for $40.00 each. Traders are designed by the advertiser on 8-1/2" x 8-1/2" paper. We reduce the ad to 3-1/4" x 3-1/4" size. Trader ads are a low cost form of advertising. Because of this, CBG does not typeset, screen photos, add logos, artwork or credit card symbols to Trader ads.

••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••
These buying prices may look cheap but they accurately reflect what I have been paying at comicons through out 1996. Many dealers have been more than happy to sell at 50%-75% off guide in order to move low-grade, low demand items. Call if any questions.
••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••
I SELL CHEAP TOO! Plenty of comics before 1960 in stock; love, crime, war, western, some superhero and horror, all at guide or discounted 20%-40%-50%. Still have many silver age Marvels (Str. Tales,TOS,TTA) at 50-75% off!. Send a buck for my latest comics list! Mag list for adults $2.
••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••
I collect scratch tickets from all the state lotteries and will gladly take losing tickets in exchange for comics. Most states are worth a dime each in trade, some like Idaho, Montana, Rhode Island @ 25c each. Older tix at $1-2-3 each. Send for details.

Trader Tips

The Trader ads in CBG are an easy and economical way to advertise. Simply design your ad in a space that is 8½" wide by 8½" high and send it along with payment ($40.00 per Trader space) and complete reference form to:

COMICS BUYER'S GUIDE
Advertising Department
700 E. State Street
Iola, WI 54990-0001

We'll reduce your ad to the proper size and place it in the issue(s) you request. If no specific issue(s) is requested, we'll run your ad in the next available issue.

Keep in mind that CBG does not typeset, screen photos, add logos, artwork or credit card symbols to Trader ads. The better your ad looks when you send it to us, the better it will look when it is reduced and published in CBG.

TRADERS

Trader ads are available for $40.00 each. Traders are designed by the advertiser on 8-1/2" x 8-1/2" paper. We reduce the ad to 3-1/4" x 3-1/4" size. Trader ads are a low cost form of advertising. Because of this, CBG does not typeset, screen photos, add logos, artwork or credit card symbols to Trader ads.

TRADERS

Trader ads are available for $40.00 each. Traders are designed by the advertiser on 8-1/2" x 8-1/2" paper. We reduce the ad to 3-1/4" x 3-1/4" size. Trader ads are a low cost form of advertising. Because of this, CBG does not typeset, screen photos, add logos, artwork or credit card symbols to Trader ads.

ORIGINAL ART

1) BERNIE WRIGHTSON: Finished, signed pen & ink preliminary to Web of Horror cover. Man and woman menaced by tall three-armed hunchback. Lots of fine cross-hatching. Approx. 8x10. $500.

2) BERNIE WRIGHTSON: Poe Portfolio. Each print signed. Includes a letter from Bernie To Chris Zavisa discussing the prelims for the portfolio. $300.00.

3) VAMPIRA: 9x12 painted self-potrait of the original Mistress of the Dark. Rare. $250.00

4) ALAN LEE. Delicate pencil drawing from "Castles". (Kafka's castle in the back pages of the book.) A lovely rendering. Very moody. $150.00.

5) BERNIE WRIGHTSON: SWAMP THING. Detailed pencil layout for a page in issue 5 (?). $250.00.

6) DAVE DORMAN. Pencil drawing of a woman, seen from the back, disrobing on a space station. For L. Ron Hubbards' "Writers of the Future". $50.00.

7) WILLIAM JOYCE. Marker drawing of children dressed for Halloween. $500.00.

8) CLIVE BARKER. 8x10 pen & ink. 4 renderings on this single page, including a man hanged. Signed. Very arty (Picasso-like) and frameable. $200.

Xeroxes on request.

Trader Tips

The Trader ads in CBG are an easy and economical way to advertise. Simply design your ad in a space that is 8½" wide by 8½" high and send it along with payment ($40.00 per Trader space) and complete reference form to:

COMICS BUYER'S GUIDE
Advertising Department
700 E. State Street
Iola, WI 54990-0001

We'll reduce your ad to the proper size and place it in the issue(s) you request. If no specific issue(s) is requested, we'll run your ad in the next available issue.

Keep in mind that CBG does not typeset, screen photos, add logos, artwork or symbols to Trader ads. The better your ad looks when you send it to us, the better it will look when it is reduced and published in CBG.

The advertisers' index is provided as a reader service. Occasional last minute changes may result in ads appearing on pages other than those listed here. The publisher assumes no liability for omissions or errors.

GENERAL INFORMATION

A. PAYMENT: Ads must be accompanied by payment. You may pay with a check, money order, or credit card.

B. CREDIT CARDS: We will accept the following credit cards: VISA, MasterCard, American Express, Discover.

C. DEADLINE: For all advertising is 4:00 p.m. each Tuesday, unless otherwise stated on deadline card.

D. TERMS: Cash with copy only. All advertisers must provide information for the confidential use of the publisher should questions arise.

E. CONTRACT RATES are available for 6, 13, 26, or 52 consecutive issues. Contract rates apply to fulfillment of contract items. Cancellation of a contract by the advertiser allows the publisher to reinvoice covered ads at the earned rate. This rate card is a part of the advertising contract.

F. MINORS are required to furnish a statement of responsibility from their parent or guardian before their advertising can be accepted.

G. ERRORS: Typewritten copy is recommended. The publisher is not responsible for errors resulting from long-hand or illegible copy, or changes submitted by telephone. The publisher's liability for any error shall not exceed the cost of the space occupied by that error.

H. LAYOUT and design services are provided by Krause Publications for advertisers who do not submit camera-ready copy. Due to the creative and subjective nature of these services, credit will not be allowed for conceptual variations.

I. GRADING: Items offered in any ad must be properly described as to condition, conforming to the standards set forth in Comics Buyer's Guide Price Guide. Advertisers may also exercise the option of grading offerings by applying a unique personal system, providing the standards applied are detailed in the ad to avoid confusion.

J. RETURN PRIVILEGE: Except as otherwise specified in any ad, an advertiser must accept the return of any merchandise postmarked within ten working days of its receipt by a customer.

K. P.O. BOX ADS are allowed, but the permanent home address, phone number and place of business of the advertiser must be filed with the publisher before advertisements may be printed.

M. ADVERTISING AGENCIES: There are no agency discounts.

N. CAMERA READY display ads qualify for a 15% discount. Copy must be ready for camera without additional paste-up or film work required. No charge for reproductions, enlargements or mail response key change. Classified Display, Comics Trader, Collector's Showcase and classified word ads do not qualify for the camera ready discount.

O. SPACE RESERVATIONS available for camera ready ads only. Must be made prior to ad deadline. Reserved space must be paid for even if ad does not arrive on time.

P. PRE-PRINTED INSERTS are available in Comics Buyer's Guide. Inquire for additional information and technical specifications.

Q. CIRCULATION is throughout the United States and Canada by subscription and single copy sales by agents in shops and other outlets.

R. PROOF OF PUBLICATION: Tear sheets of new display ads are mailed to those advertisers requesting this service. We regret we cannot provide this service to classified advertisers.

S. NOTE: All advertising orders are accepted subject to the terms and provisions of the current rate card. Krause Publications, Inc. reserves the right to decline advertising or suspend advertising privileges for such periods of time as in its discretion it sees fit, for any reason, whatsoever, irrespective of the validity of the reasons for such declination or suspension. The forwarding of an order is construed as acceptance of all rates and conditions in effect at the time the advertising is submitted. The publisher will not be bound by any conditions, printed or otherwise, appearing on any order for advertising space, billing instructions or copy instructions which conflict with its policies. Advertisers and advertising agencies assume liability for all content (including text representation and illustrations) of advertisements printed, and also assumes responsibility of any claims arising therefrom made against the publisher. It is the advertiser's or agency's responsibility to obtain appropriate releases on any item or individual pictured in their advertising. All agreements are subject to strikes, accidents, acts of God, or other contingencies beyond the publisher's control. The publisher reserves the right to edit any advertising copy to conform with its standard advertising policies, and to reject any ad which in its opinion is unethical or objectional for any reason.

UNIT ADVERTISING:

A. COLLECTORS SHOWCASE

Collectors Showcase Units are 3-1/4" wide x 1-5/8" high and can be bought in multiples. All typesetting is done by Krause Publications and is included in the price.

Cost per ad per issue: ads must run consecutively to earn contract discounts

| 1 Issue | 6 Issues | 13 Issues | 26 Issues | 52 Issues |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| $29.00 | $28.00 | $27.00 | $26.00 | $24.00 |

B. COMICS TRADER ADS

"No-frills" advertising with a price to match. Design your own ad - just type your ad clearly on an 8-1/2"w x 8-1/2"h sheet of paper. We will reduce your Trader ad to fit a 1/9 page space (3-1/4"w x 3-1/4"h). Super Traders should be typed on an 8-1/2"w x 8-1/2"h sheet of paper which will be reduced to fit a 5" x 5" space.

Regular Trader

(Cost per ad per issue: ads must run consecutively to earn contract discounts. Limit 6 Trader spaces per page per advertiser.)

| 1 Issue | 6 Issues | 13 Issues | 26 Issues | 52 Issues |

C. RETAILER DIRECTORY ..... $3.50 per issue

Leads fans to your cash register! List your store name, address, phone number and 15 words of description. Sold in 26 and 52 week increments. It's targeted more to the comics buff than the yellow pages - and it's more cost effective. If you sell COMICS BUYER'S GUIDE in your store, we will publish your listing in bold face type at no extra charge.

ADVERTISING REQUIREMENTS

A completed reference form must be in our confidential files before any buy, sell or trade ad can be placed. See below. Minors are required to furnish a statement of responsibility from their parents or guardian before their advertising can be accepted.

Payment must accompany an advertisement and must be in the form of a personal check drawn on U.S., Canadian or Mexican bank; money orders; international money orders; cashier's checks; or with your VISA, MasterCard, American Express or Discover credit card. Send your credit card number, expiration date, and the name on the card, along with permission to charge the card for your ad, with your advertising copy.

Cracking open the But I Digress mail bag, let's do strictly science-fiction this time out with commentary on two of the biggest invasion movies of the year: Independence Day and Star Trek: First Contact.

JUGGLING Multiple Titles

Brent Frankenhoff
CBG Associate Editor

I recently watched Carl Barks: The Duck Maestro produced by The Carl Barks Studio and, while it was an admirable first effort, it could have been better.

First, a fellow professional — like Stan Lee on the Comic Book Greats tapes from Stabur Home Video — should have interviewed Barks. Several of the questions were poorly phrased, leaving Barks almost nothing to answer.

Second, the tape suffered from insufficient editing. Most significantly, a piece about The Carl Barks Studio should have run at the beginning of the tape rather than the end, so the viewer would know more about what The Carl Barks Studio was all about. I found this portion of the tape fascinating.

I would really like to see another tape with more Barks art shown during the interview, perhaps a closeup of Barks' work on a drawing board.

First up are musings from Tom Conolly of Columbus, Ohio, who writes:

Just a little thought provides an excellent reason for The Borg not traveling through time to assimilate all cultures at a time when they are technologically incapable of fighting back effectively.

The Borg are not simply interested in assimilating cultures.

It is also a high priority to assimilate new technology. Free thinking being a major component in developing new technologies, then it can be assumed that a Borgified culture is at a technological dead-end. Such a culture can advance to the levels of Borg technology but never beyond.

This would explain why The Borg need to assimilate new technology. They are unable to develop any of their own.

If the Borg travelled through time to assimilate new cultures, they would effectively halt the development of the very technology they wish to assimilate. To use Earth as an example, if the Borg had successfully assimilated the human population in the past, then Earth would never have developed transporters, replicators, photon torpedoes, tricorders, androids, and the list goes on — and none of that technology could be assimilated. (Yes, The Borg already have some of that technology — transporters, for instance — but I trust you get my point.)

At that point the question is why The Borg would go back in time and risk destroying the very technology that they want. We can only assume they believe that the advantage of wiping out the human obstacle to assimilating Alpha Quadrant technology is greater than any advantage from assimilating human technology. After all, that still allows them to assimilate Vulcan, Klingon, Romulan, Cardassian, Bajoran, and all other non-human technologies from the Alpha Quadrant.

You are, however, completely correct about the single Borg ship dilemma. Unless we assume they have only one battleship.

I did, however, come up with a conundrum that bothered me in the movie even though it never bugged me in the TV show (but should have).

Admittedly, there would seem to be no such thing as lawsuits in the Trek universe; still, it seems to me that given the potential for accidents — some fatal — why would you build a holodeck in which the safeties could be turned off? Remember the episode "A Fistful of Datas"? The entire problem could have been avoided if the holodeck safeties had simply been welded into place (or whatever) with no way to turn them off — ever!

Yes, I know Worf needs to turn off the safeties when doing his Klingon battle exercises (as everyone has reminded me when I mention this), but I hardly think the holodeck builders had Klingon battle training in mind when they designed the systems. Similarly, I can't believe they anticipated that Picard would someday need to use the holodeck to take out some Borgs. So why not make the safety feature unalterable?

For that matter, someone else pointed out that, if machine guns can effectively kill The Borg, then why do Picard and crew continue to battle the Borg with energy weapons? Worf even comments that the weapons will have to be recalibrated and that the Borg would adapt quickly. So why not just ask the replicators to provide some tommy guns? (Hey, if Picard can override the safeties on the holodeck, he can certainly override the safeties on the replicators.)

Any thoughts on these matters? Along these lines, have you read the several Nitpicker's Guides to Trek by Phil Farrand? The three books (with a Deep Space Nine guide coming soon) are filled with little inconsistencies like these. I bet you would like them a lot.

P.S. Not to compare the radical right to Borg assimilation (but if the shoe fits ...), but this is yet another reason to support the CBLDF and our right to free speech and free thought. Being unable to even consider unconventional thoughts and radical ideas — such as that the Earth is round or that the Earth orbits the sun — does tend to eliminate scientific advancement.

You raise some valid points, Tom, although we do have to make up our minds on this point. If their primary interest is technology, then I can see their not attacking Earth too early in the time stream. If, on the other hand, they've decided that humans simply aren't worth hassling with, then why wait until Earth is on the cusp of its golden space age? Why not pop back a century earlier, before Earth could mount any sort of defense? Still, your explanation goes a long way towards explaining why The Borg ever bother to face anyone on equal terms.

As for the safeties being capable of being shut off, it strikes me that this is one of those show-necessity reasons for which there is not a logical real-world explanation. If they wanted to do stories set in the holodeck in which there are tangibles at stake (like lives, for example) then the holodeck has to be capable of doing genuine damage. On the other hand, it defies reason that people would go into the holodeck, into a life-and-death situation, as a mere means of entertainment. It's one thing to risk death when your method of entertainment is — oh, I dunno — skydiving, let's say. There the danger comes within specific bounds. (If your chute doesn't open, you're a pancake.) But a holodeck scenario — particularly detective stuff like Dixon Hill — has so many variables that it's impossible to participate safely.

So the Trek creators try to have it both ways. Yes, the holodeck is perfectly safe — except when the participant wants it to be potentially lethal. And, to be blunt, if I were Starfleet, I'd be carefully monitoring those in the crew who deliberately asked for the safeties to be taken out. It's like deciding to go for a leisurely drive, but first you have the seat belts and air bags removed, so that you're facing a genuine risk if an accident should befall. This doesn't strike me as the sanest and most reasonable of attitudes for Starfleet personnel to have.

Next we've got Paul Griffin, who came up with "Some More Things Independence Day Taught Me":

1. It's always a wise tactical move to shoot down a 15-mile wide, multi-million ton spacecraft when it's hovering directly over the place you're defending.

2. It's perfectly safe to stand out in the open and watch huge chunks of debris rain down from high altitudes and/or orbit.

3. Conventional air-to-air rockets will cause great damage to a 15-mile-wide spacecraft with a 50-meter-thick hull.

4. Dogs are fireproof.

5. Aliens capable of interstellar travel and armed with death rays will neglect to develop circuit breakers.

6. Aliens have yet to install fire fighting equipment aboard their space craft.

7. They aren't too keen on damage control, either.

8. The Grand Canyon is located in California.

9. Always send several scarce, expensive stealth bombers to launch one nuclear missile, rather than a bunch of them at once.

10. Coca-Cola representatives will have no problem servicing machines located in top-secret government installations during alien attacks.

11. When fleeing major port cities, ignore all waterways and drive.

12. When the human race is getting its butt kicked by alien invaders, send in the cable guy (who should arrive sometime between 8 and 5).

13. He will arrive on time (on a holiday, yet).

14. Even aliens will ignore Euro-Disney.

15. Brent Spiner makes a lousy speaker phone.

16. Aliens don't like having helicopters flash their high beams in their eyes. (Some things are universal.)

17. It's all right to give fireworks to 3-year-olds.

18. Aliens wearing bio-mechanical battle armor are too weak to break through plate glass that can be shattered with pistol fire.

19. Marines can sniff out their girlfriends amid several hundred square miles of smoldering rubble (no surprise there).

20. Never assume that newly arrived aliens are familiar with communication methods from Close Encounters.

21. Aliens smash cities because they like being mean.

22. Species whose idea of adequate reconnaissance methods is to give rectal probes to rednecks can be beaten in several days.

23. Fifty-year-late alien recon ships are routine.

24. New York's never looked better.

25. RVs are always a priority military target.

THE UNEXPURGATED CARL BARKS

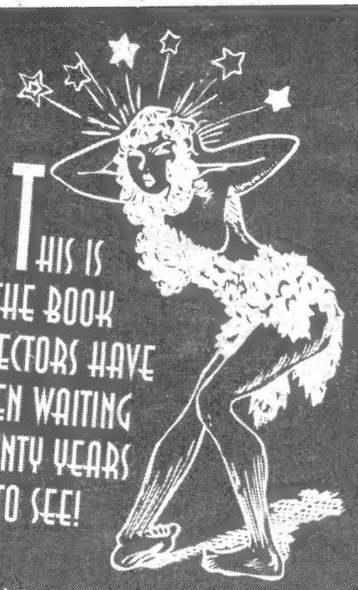
SELECTED CARTOONS FROM CALGARY EYE OPENER BY CARL BARKS

FOREWORD BY ART SPIEGELMAN

© The Bruce Hamilton Company



THIS IS THE BOOK COLLECTORS HAVE BEEN WAITING TWENTY YEARS TO SEE!

68 PAGES IN FULL COLOR

6" x 9" trade paperback format
$9.95 retail ($13.95 Canadian)
Ships the week of January 20, 1997!

The Unexpurgated Carl Barks contains approximately 120 of the best, the funniest, the most outrageous cartoons drawn by Carl Barks between 1928 and 1936 for the Minneapolis-based "girlie" magazine, The Calgary Eye-Opener! Single copies — perhaps with only two or three pieces by Barks — have been selling on the collector's market for $25.00 to $75.00 apiece for years.

A few isolated drawings from The Calgary Eye-Opener have appeared in various publications and comics from time to time, but most of these have been reprinted without captions or because they were tame. Not so, in The Unexpurgated Carl Barks! Every gag has been chosen by a committee of fans for quality in art, ideas, presentation and humor...warts and all! And it contains the first animation art by Carl Barks ever published!

Warning! There are cartoons in The Unexpurgated Carl Barks that some readers today might find offensive. Reader's sensitive to today's "politically correct" issues should not order the book, nor should parents order it for the very young. But all adults who are capable of putting the times these were drawn into correct historical perspective should order a copy!

❑ THE UNEXPURGATED CARL BARKS . . . $9.95

WE ARE ALSO OFFERING A FACSIMILE EDITION OF THE EXTREMELY RARE

COO-COO #1

This sometimes bawdy humor magazine, published in 1932, featured Carl Barks as art director! He also contributed about thirty percent of the mostly line-and-wash artwork!

The facsimile faithfully reproduces, at original published size, all 32 pages (including covers) of this mostly black and white (with some red spot color) magazine!
